AN EVER CHANGING CAMPUS

the many faces of nsu

Students on NSU's campus during the 2012-2013 school year noticed major changes. Starting with the completion of the new student services building and continuing with the replacement of pipes all around campus, students may have wonder if these changes were worth the hassle.

Charles Bourg, director of the Facilities Services Complex, recognized the drawbacks to the construction around campus, but felt that the plan for making the campus more student-oriented was worth it.

The pipeline construction replaced high pressure steam lines with new water lines, which are used in the heating of the buildings. The student services building centralized, student affairs to avoid the hassle of having the offices so separated.

"I think what we're doing right now is developing a master plan," Bourg said. "We've got a lot of ideas and plans for the campus."

According to Bourg, a more pedestrian-friendly environment is being considered in future projects. These include: lengthening the current jogging path to loop around the campus, extending the Kyser plaza and possibly adding a park where the married student housing complex stands. Along with those plans, the updating of some of the older rooms in Kyser is a concern for Bourg. The challenge of renovating classrooms that are still in use may cause confusion in the future.

Roxanne Lane, an instructor in the College of Science, remembers a small building between Fournet Hall that held several rooms for science experiments and a mock shuttle for NSU's Space Camp. The camp was available to 10-15 year-old students.

"I stopped and cried one day when I saw the wooden space shuttle out there on the trash heap," Lane said. "Many of the campers became NSU students later on because they had such a great time here."

Although Lane appreciates the beautiful landscaping and the news of a more pedestrian-friendly environment, she pointed out the obvious neglect in many of the older classrooms.

Richard Kyle, a senior history major, has seen the demolition of three residence halls along with the construction of UP1 and UP2.

"Tearing down the residence halls have made a somewhat negative impact on the housing situation," Kyle said. However, he believes some of the changes have definitely benefited the university."
"The campus may change, but the spirit of NSU will never die," Kyle said.

how did buildings on campus get their names?

WARREN EASTON

Warren Easton became state superintendent of education in 1884. Easton founded the State Normal School, which later became Northwestern State University.

VARNADO HALL

Edwards Varnado was Dean of Women from 1915-1942.

KYSER HALL

Dr. John Schnebly Kyser was an instructor at Northwestern State College for 31 years. He served as president from 1954 to 1966. While president, Kyser expanded NSC to include: Prudhomme Hall, Natchitoches Hall, St. Denis Dining Hall, West Caspari Hall, Caddo Hall, Louisiana Hall, Bossier Hall, Sabine Hall, Rapides Hall, Iberville Dining Hall, Williamson Hall, Prather Coliseum, Roy Hall and the nursing facilities on Shreveport's campus. Many of these buildings have since been repurposed or demolished. Kyser also saw to the creation of the graduate teaching program. NSC would become Northwestern State University in 1970.

A. A. FREDERICKS

Albert A. Fredericks was president of Normal State College from 1934 to 1941. During his term, he added 10 programs to the college. The school year changed from three 12-week quarters to two 18-week semesters and a 9-week summer school. During Fredericks' term, the college secured $4,166,150.52 to improve the campus and buildings.

FREIDMAN STUDENT UNION

In 1944, Sylvan N. Friedman was elected to the House of Representatives and served for two terms. In 1952, he was elected to the Louisiana State Senate and served there for 20 years. During his tenure in the legislature, he was instrumental in securing many facilities currently standing at Northwestern State, including the Student Union, Prather Coliseum, as well as several residence halls and classroom buildings.

GALLASPY COLLEGE OF EDUCATION AND HUMAN DEVELOPMENT

This fall semester, the College of Education changed their name to the Gallaspy (Family) College of Education and Human Development. The change was to show tribute to NSU graduate Mary Rives Gallaspy and her family for their generosity to and involvement with NSU over the years.

EUGENE P. WATSON MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Eugene Payne Watson was the head librarian and professor of library science from 1940 to 1964. In 1950, Watson founded Alpha Beta Alpha, the first coeducational undergraduate library science fraternity in the United States. At the time of Watson's death in 1964, the fraternity had 29 chapters nationally.

BIENVENU HALL

Dr. René J. Bienvenu Jr. served NSU for a combined 30 years. He assumed the presidency in 1978. His primary goal was "To establish Northwestern as an institution recognized for its academic excellence." Bienvenu is credited for the innovation of new or separated departments such as: mass communications, special education, educational psychology, history and agriculture. He was also responsible for establishing the Creative and Performing Arts degree.

JAMES A. NOE MILITARY SCIENCE BUILDING

James Albert Noe served during WWI as lieutenant of the 369th Infantry of the U.S. Army. He became a politician in 1932, holding a position in the State Senate for two years. Noe served as Louisiana governor from Jan. 28 to May 12 of 1936.

DR. AND MRS. WEBB SPEAK TO THE STUDENTS

making their own history at NSU

Imagine walking through campus wearing a beanie on your head embroidered with your name. Today it might look out of place, but during Dr. Randall J. Webb's college years, it wasn't.

Wearing the beanie meant you were a freshman, and boys were considered dogs. It was all just harmless fun.

"You can't even imagine that, but that was a part of the fun of going to college," Webb said, describing the beanie tactic. Freshman boys and girls on Northwestern's campus experienced a tradition of wearing the class ranking hats.

Webb has served 16 years as the 17th president of Northwestern State University. He graduated from Northwestern in 1965, then again in 1966 with a master's degree.

He has experienced some of the same traditions that Northwestern still has today. The story of Isabella, the campus ghost, is one that has been told to students for years, including Webb. The alma mater is still as important as it was when he went to school. "We still teach students the alma mater," Webb said.

"There's a very close relationship with Natchitoches and Northwestern," Webb said. The close relationship has shone throughout the years since Webb was in college.

"It was a period of growth," he said, describing his college experience at Northwestern. Although students today share many of the same traditions, some traditions have been let go. The tradition of the State Fair game between Northwestern and Louisiana Tech in Shreveport is one that doesn't exist anymore. "Rivalries were intense," Webb said. "I would love to bring back the State Fair game."

Brenda Webb, the President's wife, attended the University of Southern Mississippi where she received her undergraduate degree. There she met then doctoral student Dr. Webb who introduced her to NSU's campus. According to her the moment she stepped foot on the campus, it was the beginning of the traditions for her. She later earned her masters in Student Personnel Services at NSU in 1992.

"One of the most visible symbols of NSU traditions is the columns," she said, "a symbol of our excellence and our rich heritage." The three columns currently stand outside of Russell Hall.
She also mentioned the selection of Mr. and Mrs. NSU, the preliminary pageant for Miss Louisiana, Miss Northwestern Lady of the Bracelet and the fight song. These are some fun traditions NSU holds. Other traditions that are just beginning are the freshman inferno and the Freshman Convocation, followed by the Freshman Picnic.

In 1965, there wasn't a Kyser or Morrison Hall. Where Turpin stands today is where the track and field events used to be held. The center of the campus was the performing arts area and basketball was played in the building we call the WRAC.

"About a year before I graduated is when Prather was built," Webb said.
"It was a wonderful experience."

According to Webb, he always planned on attending Northwestern, especially since approximately 50 members of his family had already attended. "I looked forward to coming here myself," he said.
He also experienced a time when $25 or less could hinder a student from going to college. That was a time where a bottle of Coke cost only 5 cents.

According to Dr. Webb, Varnado Hall was the best female dorm on campus, and females had to maintain a certain GPA to stay there. "Females would fight to get in Varnado," he said.
"Today we have an outstanding marching band," he said. The same outstanding band existed when he went to college.

He enjoyed the Christmas festivals while he attended Northwestern that Natchitoches still hosts today. Mrs. Webb said it is one of her favorite traditions. "This truly kicks off the Christmas season for me," she said.

Dr. Webb and Mrs. Webb are proud of what Northwestern has to offer. Mrs. Webb wants students to encourage others to study the traditions, respect them, appreciate them and look for new and positive traditions to leave behind.

Freshman CONNECTION

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

the genesis of priceless bonds

"Freshman Connection is like an espresso shot." Freshman Connector Jebha Babu said that's the quickest way to describe her experience as a connector.

Early mornings, late nights, hard work and enthusiasm just come with the territory of being a Freshman Connector.

"The main goal is to get their spirits up for NSU and get them registered for classes," Babu said. "We show them around the campus and tell them about all the opportunities available to them."

Candidates for Feshman Connector have to go through a rigorous audition process after submitting an online application that requires a 3.0 G.P.A. and an opening for a spring semester Freshman Connector class.

"I applied because I really wanted to share my experience," Babu said. "I truly enjoyed my college life and I learned many things. I really wanted to share what I learned with incoming students."

Senior biology major Megan McDaniel shared the same sentiment.

"I wanted to meet new people that were eager to learn," McDaniel said. "And I felt like becoming a connector would be the pinnacle of my college career. I feel like I've reached the top. Before I was a Freshman Connector, graduating high school was my biggest accomplishment. Now, it's representing my school as a Freshman Connector."

Babu and McDaniel have similar views on one of best things about being a connector.

"I loved the bond I made with other people that I wouldn't have met otherwise," Babu said.

McDaniel said she enjoyed the bond with fellow connectors and the incoming freshman as well.

"The bond you make with other people is priceless," McDaniel said." It's a family environment. It's a second family."

McDaniel said the most challenging aspect about being a connector wasn't working with different personalities, but managing her time.

"It was hard work because I'm involved in so many things, "McDaniel said. "But when you want something really bad, you will make time for it. I didn't have time for it, but I made time because I really wanted to be a connector."

Senior computer information systems major Ryan Owens said he was inspired to be a connector by his own Freshman Connection experience.

"He [freshman connector] inspired me to get involved on campus and being involved on campus has helped me grow personally," Owens said. "I wanted to share that same experience with someone else. I could relate to them because I had been there before not long ago."

Freshman Brittany Whittaker said Freshman Connection was the best part of her college experience so far.

"I liked that everyone was so friendly," Whittaker said. "I am shy, but all the dancing and singing and smiling made me feel like I choose the right place. It made me feel like I belonged at NSU."

DORM ROOMS: THEN AND NOW

bye bye hootenannies

As decades have passed at NSU, the campus is not the only aspect that has changed. The best way to see how the times have changed is by looking at how student's dorm rooms have evolved.

What has been constant about dorm rooms over the years is their purpose to foster academic and social development. However, how students study and socialize in their campus habitats has altered every decade.

The 1950s and 60s spawned a social gathering referred to as the hootenanny. This event gathered young college students together for Saturday night fun out on the town.

However, many sought to hold their own social gatherings without going out and getting too wild. Thus, the college dorm room created a place of social refuge.

Why go out every night when you can sit at home with the girls and have gossip beauty nights? Many girls in the 1960s made use of the portable hair dryers that they could place over their heads in the comfort of their dorm room rather than going to the salon.

Guys also made use of their dorm rooms to hang out with their fellow males with an ice-cold bottle of Coca-Cola in hand (at least a bottle of something).

Fifty years later, the face of our campus has entirely changed. With that, the appearance of the student body, their sense of style and the activities are hardly the same.

While students may have their own hootenanny (without actually calling it that), the times are different and so is the technology.

The days when movies could only be seen by "going to the picture show" are far gone. One of the most common social events held by dorm room residents are "movie nights." And let's not forget to mention the technological productivity that comes from playing video games, which also serves as a primary distraction for students.

Students also seek refuge in the lounge right down the hall from their dorm rooms. "The lounge is a good place to go if you want to hang out but don't want to leave the dorms," sophomore Rachel Zeringue said. "It's a good way to get out of your room."

According to sophomore and Residential Assistant Olivia Doucet, "The lounge is a good place to connect with your fellow students and study comfortably." The dorm hall lounge is used for the toughest of study nights and the most fun of hangouts.

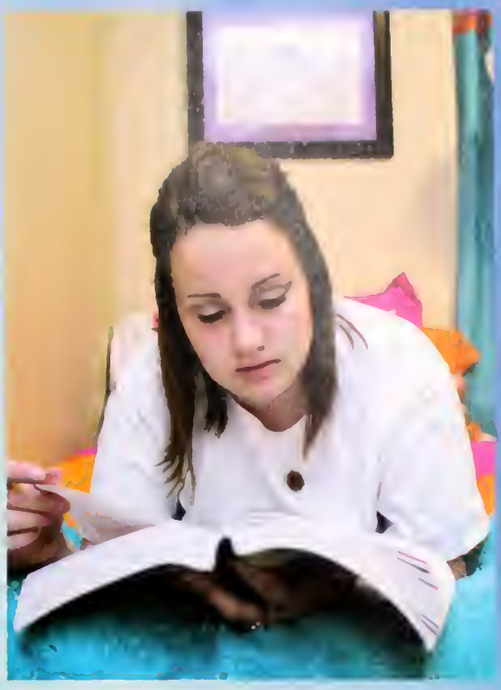

Probably the biggest difference between now and then would be the amount of decoration that students put into their dorm rooms. Some students in the 1960s may have had the desire to elaborately decorate their dorms, but the merchandise to do that was not as extensive then as it is now.

According to sophomore and Sigma Sigma Sigma member Brittany McConathy, her dorm room is decorated to reflect her tastes and interests. Bright orange and purple resonate throughout her room to reflect her school spirit. She also has Tri Sigma decorations in places from her wall to her bathroom to reflect the importance of her sisterhood. "It is definitely my sanctuary on the NSU campus," McConathy said.

Overall, developments in technology and decorative merchandise have changed the appearance of the average dorm room over the last 50 years. However, what has always remained constant is their use by students to hang out with each other and thus experience socialization to grow as individuals.

GREEK RECRUITMENT

relaying histories and keeping traditions alive

NSU's fraternities are diverse in how they are involved on campus and in the philanthropies they are invested in. However, what they all have in common are having chapter histories that originated here at NSU.

Every chapter's history has uniquely shaped that fraternity into the Greek organizations they are today. As a result, each chapter has their own way of passing down their history and keeping their traditions alive.

According to senior and Theta Chi fraternity member Blake Allen, living by their creed is how their traditions are emphasized and kept alive. "To know your background and what your fraternity is about, allows new members to efficiently understand the history of what they are about to encounter."

Sigma Nu demonstrates the importance of showing new members chapter history in the pledging process. "Sigma Nu keeps its traditions by ensuring a flawless candidate education program that allows students to excel in all areas of the Greek community and as a future leader," junior and chapter commander John Schlag said.

Phi Mu Alpha also instills knowledge of their chapter history in their probationary members, according to senior and chapter president Jonathan Bordelon. Every probationary member receives a pledge name. Bordelon says that a pledge name is "a few sentences that involve that person during their probationary process." According to Bordelon, each name is several stories combined into one and is a way for Phi Mu Alpha to pass down its traditions.

Bordelon also said that their chapter has the position of historian, which is occupied by junior Craig Flynn this year. Flynn is responsible for maintaining a record of what the chapter does throughout the current year and previous years.

NSU has a long and proud history that is maintained by the different campus Greek Life organizations. Greek fraternities proudly bear their letters on campus and on themselves to represent their respective histories and traditions that every member can take pride in.

GREEK RECRUITMENT

Nervous ladies flooded the sorority houses, anxious to find a chapter that meshed well with them during the 2012 Panhellenic Council sorority recruitment.

As for the sorority chapters, they set out to find ladies to carry on the traditions and legacy of their chapter. It is a big part of Greek life to pass on the rituals the chapters carry to better promote what they stand for.

Sororities participating in Greek recruitment this year were Phi Mu, Alpha Omicron Pi and Sigma Sigma Sigma. According to the Office of Fraternity and Sorority Life, all participating sororities held a series of informal events over the weekend where aspirants got a chance to know current chapter members and possibly future sisters.

Following tradition, at the end of recruitment weekend ladies receiving bids, or invitations to join a sorority, celebrated their achievements with a bid day party. These parties include food, fun and tons of picture taking as chapters bond with their new sisters.

Besides general recruitment traditions, current members also take their individual sorority traditions seriously. According to Alpha Omicron member Courtney New, traditions that have been passed down throughout the history of Alpha Omicron Pi are ones based upon the foundation of friendship and acceptance.

"We are all about working together with our talents as well as our time to help our chapter grow," New said. Alpha Omicron Pi went in hoping to find girls who would best suit these views that are dear to the heart of current members.

According to President Afton Owens, during recruitment Phi Mu set a goal to look for girls to uphold their three ideals of love, honor and truth. They also looked for potential members they could see becoming leaders on campus, who would focus on academic excellence and who have a heart for community service and philanthropy.

"In Phi Mu we strive to uphold the values in our creed," Owens said. "So we look for young women that will value and cherish our rituals as much as we do!"

INTRAMURAL SPORTS

students find ways to exercise and have fun

Demon intramural sports are a great way for students to exercise and stay in shape, while bringing out their competitive side. According to the Wellness, Recreation and Activity Center, intramural sports also enhance the academic experience by promoting and reinforcing teamwork and personal accomplishment, mutual respect, and integrity, competition and recreation.

The four major sports offered for Demon intramurals are football, softball, volleyball and basketball. Minor intramural events include badminton, tennis, flag football and dodge ball. But, besides just exercising, why do so many students enjoy intramurals?

"I think the best part would have to be the competition with different groups and organizations on campus," senior Phi Mu Fraternity member Cathy Akin said.

The 2012 intramural champions for the men's general division were the Baptist Collegiate Ministry (BCM), with Sigma Nu Fraternity taking the title for the Greek division. Women's general division intramural champs were BCM, with Phi Mu Fraternity taking the title for the Greek division.

"It is a great feeling to know that we as sisters, did it together," said Akin. "We accomplished so much and made so many memories."

Minor intramural sports are open and free to any student who wants to be involved, although major sports cost $25 to register a team. According to the WRAC, all Demon intramural champions receive a T-shirt and several other prizes given out at intramural events.

Most exciting of all, teams that win the campus championship in the major sports get an opportunity to represent NSU at the state competition. One team that has gotten this opportunity the last four years is Team Niko Juice for basketball.

Team Niko Juice went on to represent NSU at Louisiana State Intramural Championship playing at Centenary, University of Louisiana at Monroe and Louisiana College. There, the team had the honor of being named Louisiana State Intramural Champs.

"Since we don't play on the actual NSU basketball team, this is the next best thing to win," senior Team Niko Juice player Patrick Reliford said. "We're hoping to bring the title home again next year."

NSU GOES VIRAL

social media takes off

In the past few years, communication has become more vital in campus life and even the academic community on campus. Facebook, Twitter and outlets like these give students a chance to connect more than ever before.

Kaysee Carrere, a senior majoring in professional writing and the editor-in-chief of Argus, sees a huge advantage in finding new ways to connect to the students. As her publication is reliant on student submissions, she is constantly trying to get students involved through the use of Facebook, the Student Messenger system and she is even contemplating a new website for students to peruse old copies of the Argus.

"Our hope is that implementing these new networking ideas will generate a more positive response from students," Carrere said. According to Carrere, there have been problems with generating a student response by employing Facebook or Student Messenger separately, but she hopes this will change.

Emily Deen, a senior history major, is of another opinion. Although she sees the benefit of students communicating by email and Facebook, she still believes in the importance of staying physically connected to your community.

"I think the best way for students to stay connected is to be there," Deen said. "Making that personal connection creates a much better bond and leads to more interesting discussions."

Deen enjoys seeing NSU on social media sites such as Facebook, but still finds most of her information about upcoming events from campus billboards and fliers posted in buildings.

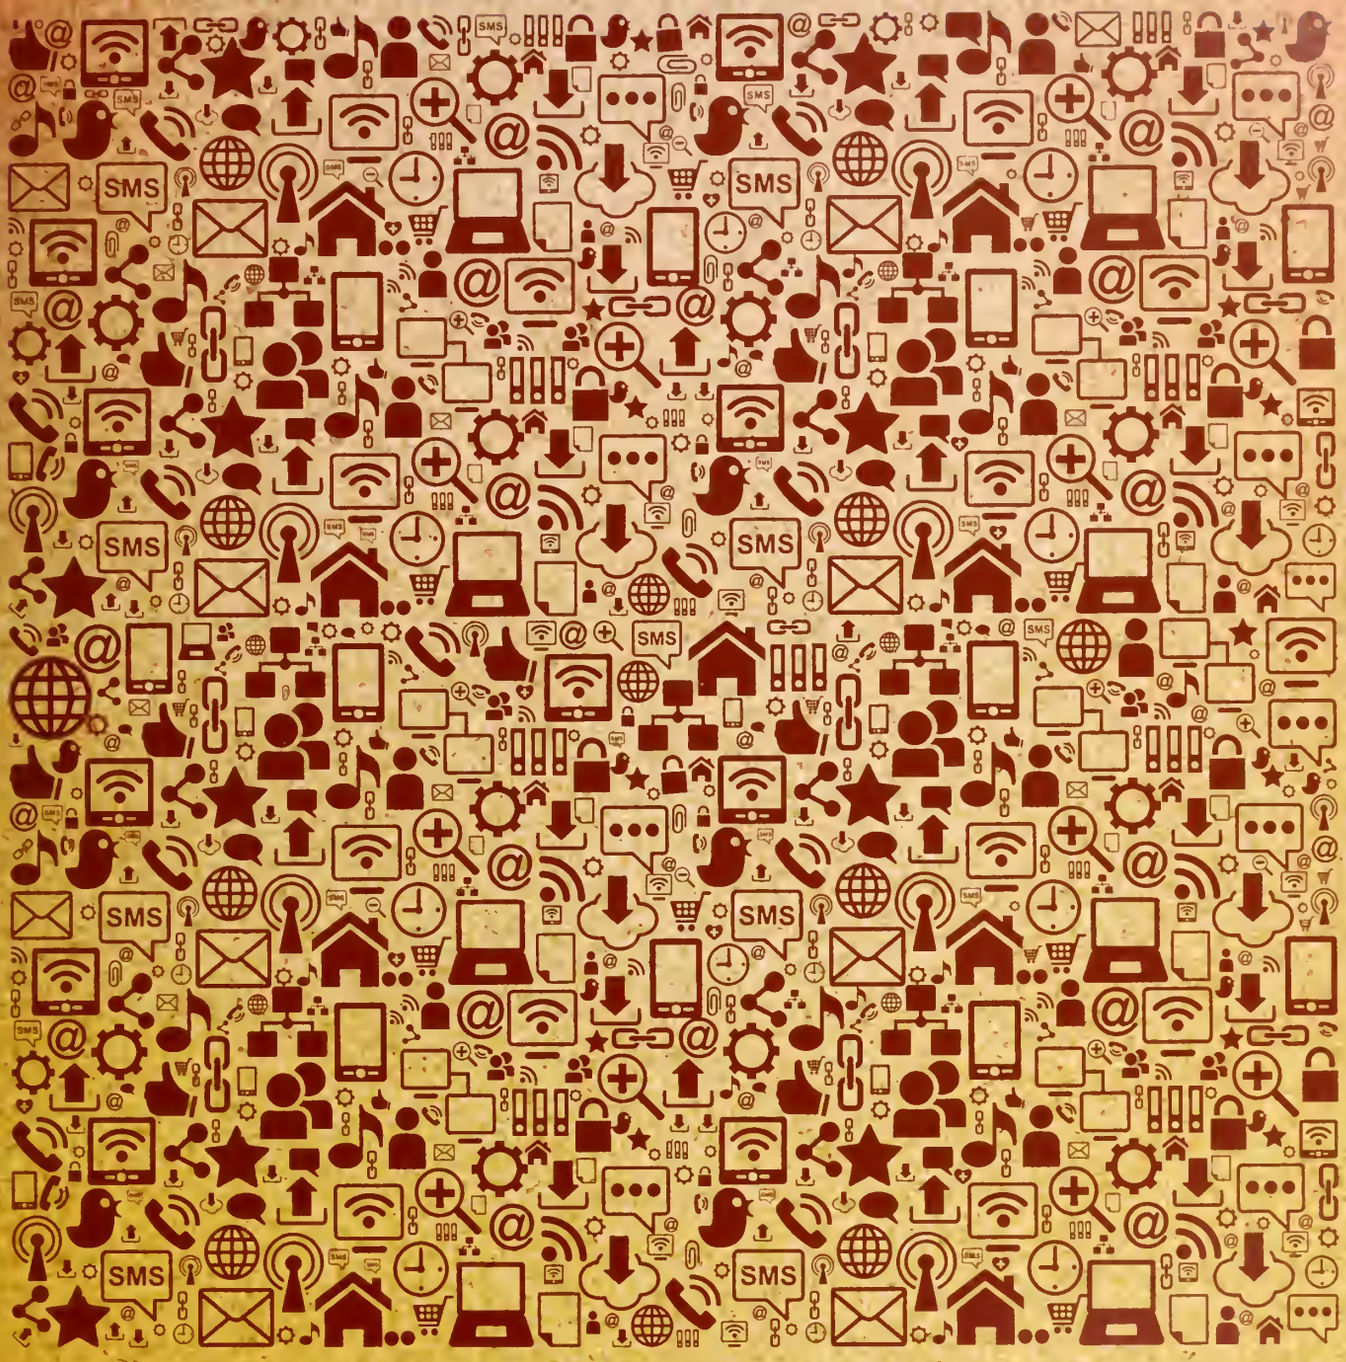

Dr. Bill Smith, the director of marketing and branding at NSU, is all for the students becoming more connected with Facebook, Twitter and other social media.

"We like to tell students to subscribe to the Facebook Four" Smith said. "The Facebook pages of the university, the athletics department, whatever department the student is interested in academically and then any other organizations on campus the student is interested in. That way you're never the one that is saying: 'Oh, I wish I had known about that.'"

Despite his support of the students' use of social media, he reminds faculty that there is a fine line between being friends with students off campus and breaking a rule in the code of conduct.

For example, if a professor wanted to remind a student that a paper was due, this would need to be over university email or it could be considered calling a student out in a public forum.

NO MORE RAMEN!

college kids need money too

Students have a variety of responsibilities: time management, studying, washing clothes and remembering to eat. There are many students who can't get by without having a job. In Natchitoches, there are few jobs available to an unqualified undergraduate and competition is fierce. However, there are a couple of ways to become employed. Walking from business to business, résumé in hand, asking for work is one way, but not the most effective. The Student Employment Office in the Friedman Student Union is your best bet at finding that perfect student job. Notice I said "perfect student job" instead of "perfect job." Remember, you don't have a degree, yet.

Adriana Wohletz, junior biology major, had one work-study job. "My job has taught me to be patient with people," said Wohletz. She works at the Student Help desk, answering phones, resetting passwords and assisting students who need help with Moodle and the university email.

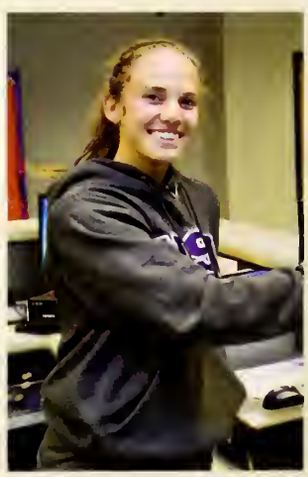

Most students can apply for (and get) a student work-study job. These are jobs on campus that usually pay minimum wage and are only part-time, but they are more flexible with student schedules. The Financial Aid Office will determine if you are eligible for work-study. The Student Employment office can also help you look into off-campus jobs. STUDENTS BEWARE: These jobs are much less flexible than work-study. The hours may not be something you can handle.

Always use your connections. Ask instructors and classmates if they know anyone who hires students. Make sure you have transportation and the skills needed for the job. (i.e. Don't say you have experience with a particular software when you know you have never seen that software before.)

Christopher Johnson, senior engineering major, has had a lot of jobs during his college career. He's worked in the fast food industry, worked for contractors and has had a work-study job. He feels that working so many jobs has prepared him for his life after college. "I've gotten used to working with co-workers. Before, I always worked by myself," Johnson said.

NOT YOUR AVERAGE DEMON

breaking college norms

Years ago sitting in class was the way to earn a college degree. That is not the only option any more as students can earn a degree online. Senior Alveria Howard takes a class online. She is also a non-traditional student.

When she graduated from Chatham High School in 1971, she attended Grambling State University. "I just decided not to continue going," Howard said. After dropping out, she went on to become a teacher at Jasper Headstart. Jasper Headstart and Chatham High School are both located in Howard's hometown, Chatham, La.

Howard, currently a social science major, already received her associate degree in general studies from Northwestern State University. Now, Howard's job requires teachers to have a bachelor's degree. This is Howard's second time taking an online class at NSU, the first taken in 2010. "I don't have a lot of computer skills," Howard said. "Sometimes it gets hard because this class is a lot of work." According to Howard, although her computer skills are minimal, she is managing.

Howard makes sure she checks her Moodle every week to stay updated with work. Even though she is not face-to-face, she said staying in contact with her teacher and classmates is easy via email.

Online classes are easier for Howard because Natchitoches is a long drive from her home. "I work full-time, so I can't afford to drive back and forth to classes," Howard said. In between teaching and studying, she also takes care of her father. She makes sure he has his medicine, clean clothes and everything else he needs.

Howard is not the only non-traditional student who wears more than one hat. "I am not only a student," Debbie Caskey said, "I am a wife, a mother and a grandmother." Caskey is an early childhood education major. She has been at NSU for four years because she wants to take her classes slowly.

After graduating from Castor High School, Caskey moved in with her sister and went to work as a dispatcher at a trucking company. "College was never mentioned in my household," Caskey said. At 19, Caskey married her high school sweetheart and became a stay-at-home mom.

In 1992, she attended Louisiana Tech hoping to earn a degree and become a teacher. It was hard trying to manage being a mother, wife and student. "I couldn't focus on everything at one time," Caskey said. She took a break from Louisiana Tech.

Caskey thought Northwestern would be a better choice for her because NSU runs by the semester system while Louisiana Tech runs by the quarter system. She thought the information would be easier to grasp.

While she is taking two classes this semester, one via Internet, Caskey takes her other class at NSU, traveling an hour from her home every Tuesday and Thursday.

Caskey notices the difference between non-traditional and traditional students. "I notice that traditional students skip class and non-traditional students don't," she said. Caskey doesn't understand how students can skip classes, which they pay for, and she travels two hours for one class.

There are upsides to driving to NSU for class. This gives her a chance to visit her son, who lives in Natchitoches.

CRIME ON CAMPUS

For approximately 23 years, Doug Prescott has served as a detective on Northwestern State University's campus. His job involves investigating all of the criminal activity that happens on campus and handling every criminal report filed.

Over the years, Prescott started a collection. Several water bongs and objects like shaving cream cans sit on the top of a shelf in his office. Water bongs are used to smoke marijuana and the cans are used to hold marijuana. When items like these are confiscated, they are added to his collection.

He has many of these items on his shelf, but drug use is not the biggest crime on campus. According to Prescott, theft is the most reported crime.

"Most of the thefts occur out of students' rooms," Prescott said. "Know your surroundings," he warns. He encourages students to lock their doors. "Theft can happen any time of the day," he said.

Another problem is personality conflicts, like arguments. "We're very lucky," Prescott said, "we don't have as many fights as you would think."

Prescott thanks the housing department for mediating most of those problems, by changing roommates who don't get along.

Although junior accounting major Rachel Belton said parking is a huge problem on campus, Prescott does not think so.

"There are so many commuters that they take up resident parking," Belton said. According to Prescott, there is plenty of parking on campus, but students have to be willing to walk.

Belton remembers the semester she received a ticket for illegal parking. Belton claimed she has seen many other students parked in the same parking spot with no ticket.

"I think they should be more consistent," Belton said.

Overall, Belton said she feels the campus is safe, even at the beginning of the semester when the campus talked of rape.

"I think the police handled it well,' Belton said, "they got the word out to students so they could be aware of their surroundings."

Prescott agreed with Belton. Even though no one was raped, students helped with the case tremendously. Communication between the police department and student body is something NSU lacks. Prescott hopes communication will get better.

The department has improved in many ways: more man power, patrol cars, bikes, segways, golf carts, laptops in cars and radars. The cars now carry laptops so police can send reports immediately.

"It's a huge difference than what it used to be," Prescott said. "Whenever I first started here, we had two vehicles."

Altogether, Prescott said the students are not a big problem, but there are those students who are a little trouble.

"They are not going to classes, and they have nothing else to do," Prescott said.

These are the student who may cause problems on campus with the addition of non-students who come on and off campus, he said.

small town filled with late night fun

Natchitoches is a diverse city. Not only is it a historic town filled with rich traditions, it is also a college town. Some may think that all college towns are the same, and to an extent they might be. What sets Natchitoches apart from the crowd is its many options for nightlife.

Some students prefer to go out to one of the local bars to dance and socialize, while some would rather just hang out with a Redbox movie and a slice of Little Caesar's pizza. No matter your preference, you can find it in Natchitoches.

"I would rather go out only because it's impossible to watch a movie with my friends. We are a pretty loud crowd," Gregory Spencer Jr., a senior majoring in physical education with a minor in dance, said.

According to Spencer, where he goes depends all on how he's feeling. "If I want a laid back night I go to the Pub or Antoons. The Body if I'm feeling crazy (on Thursday or Saturday), Yesterdays is like home, (mic night Fridays) and The Marina is a good way to start the week," Spencer said.

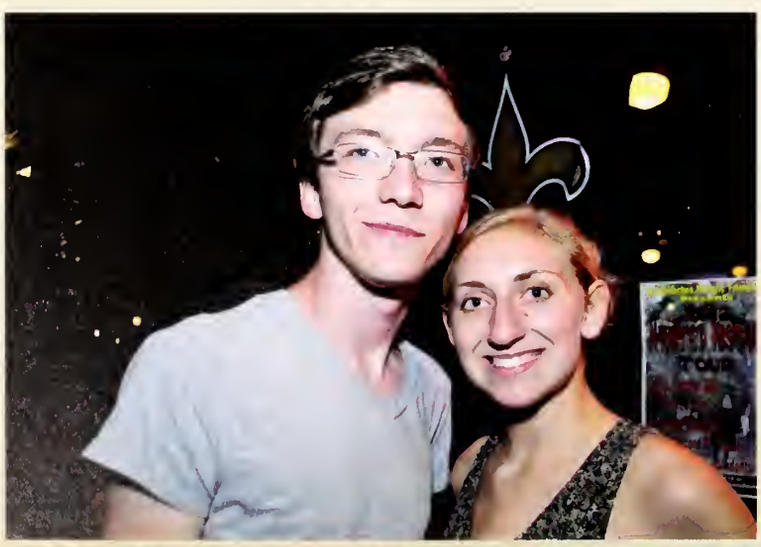

"When I'm not working, I usually like to go out to various places and meet new people. My favorite spots to frequent are the Pub, Yesterday's, where I DJ occasionally, and Bourbon Creek from time to time," Daniel Thiels, a senior majoring in general studies, said.

Thiels is also a member of two fraternities: Phi Mu Alpha and Theta Chi. "If I had the choice to go out or stay home and watch a movie with a few people, I'd have to say go out because I'm not too big on sitting in front of a TV screen," Thiels said. "I'd rather be out and about experiencing real life."

Senior theatre major Dori Huffty works a full time job, so when she finds time to go out she heads to the Pioneer Pub. According to Huffty, it is the best place to hang out with friends and a comfortable crowd. "In Natchitoches there really isn't much to do by yourself, but grab at least one fun friend and it is a completely different story!" Huffty said.

"There are some nights that I just need to get on the dance floor and that has been The Body lately, but Bourbon Creek has its nights too," said Huffty.
After studying all semester if you find yourself in need of a relaxing evening or a fast-paced night on the town, Natchitoches is the place to be.

DATING IN THE "CITY OF LIGHTS"

Natchitoches: a romantic getaway?

Natchitoches has been called a "Romantic Getaway" by many different websites and lists, but it isn't until you are walking hand-in-hand with the guy or girl who has your heart that you actually start to notice. When signing up for college, education is the primary focus, however, if one happens to end up in a serious relationship, Natchitoches is a great location to fall in love.

This would be the case for Melanie Parker, an elementary education major from Winnsboro, and Blake Bice, a criminal justice major from Kenwood, Texas. Parker and Bice have only been dating for 10 months, but in that time they have discovered what it takes to date in Natchitoches.

"Get used to spending a lot of time with each other not really doing anything., Bice said. "You have to enjoy spending time together with each other more than the things you do together."

Mitch Ernst, a Music Performance Major from DeRidder, and Larae Wooley, a business administration major from Natchitoches, have been dating three years and in that time they have discovered another secret to dating in Natchitoches. "Be creative with places to go, Natchitoches is small but there's always new ideas," Wooley said.

It also helps to bond over something and have traditions. "We have a deep love for the Red Sox," said Wooley. "And music, we can always talk about music, oh and we also kiss at every red light." "When we first started dating that was the only time we had together," said Ernst. "Just a tiny peck," Wooley said.

Parker and Bice's tradition is something completely different. "He lets me paint his toe nails hot pink for hunting season," said Parker. "It's a tradition. We went hunting one time and she painted my toes and my grandfather's toes. Well, the next day we ended up killing a deer so now it's a good luck thing," said Bice.

Dating in college also means dating on a budget. "We always take turns paying when we go out," Wooley said. "We don't really go out. We watch TV together and Redbox movies," Parker said. Going out doesn't have to be expensive either, romantic places are all around Natchitoches for free. "The Beau Jardins are romantic," Parker said. "We also like to go for walks around Chaplin's Lake. I have a boat on campus so sometimes we take the boat out on the lake," said Bice. "We go star gazing out by the Alligator Park," Wooley said. "The river front is also romantic. We walk the dogs together."

Romance is easy in a city as beautiful as Natchitoches, however, there are some things to remember when dating. "We always remember to laugh, and we always make each other laugh," Wooley said. "Also, communication is key [to a successful relationship]. I think where people go wrong in relationships at times is with any friendship you have to give and take and I think we are really good at that. So if she wants to watch Teen Mom, I'll watch her stuff with her," said Bice. "And I have to watch Fox News with him," said Parker. "It goes both ways, compromise," Bice said. "You got to learn to give a little and take a little if you want to be together."

REPUBLICANS, DEMOCRATS AND OTHERS WHO DIDN'T CARE FOR EITHER

political stances and reactions during the presidential election

Political passion was ignited in the hearts of students from all walks of life and majors across NSU by the presidential election. Issues like gay marriage, taxation and education were topics of discussion in many classrooms and dorm rooms.

For many students, this was the first time they could legally vote. Fall 2012 was a time for students to become more aware of issues that the candidates had vastly different opinions on.

As the results came in on Election Day, students and faculty kept closely tuned in to the counting of electoral ballots. After the victory of President Barack Obama, political discussions hardly came to a halt. Students had certain interest in and hopes for the election, and with every interest there was definitely a reaction.

The most appropriate issue for students to be concerned about on a college campus was how the executive branch affects education. Freshman Fallon Jade DeWine supported Obama because of his efforts to make college education affordable.

"President Obama doubled funding for Pell Grants and established a college tax credit, allowing college to become a reality for students like me," DeWine said. "Our President not only prevented federal student loan interest rates from doubling for more than 7 million students, but he also secured loan repayments at 10 percent of income,".

Some students were very invested in the results of the election because they did not have the legal right to vote. Junior Linda Ahlskog was one such student who was adamant about being informed and repeatedly encouraged all of her friends to vote. Ahlskog could not vote because she is in the process of gaining citizenship.

"I felt that in his entirety, Obama seemed to be the candidate working for my future rights and all of the values that I was holding dear, especially gay rights and health care," Ahlskog said.

Other students were more inclined to support Republican candidate Mitt Romney. Senior Casey Palombo primarily supported Romney because of his economic policies.

"It was easier to support Gov. Romney because, unlike President Obama, Romney believed that government should not play a big role in the economy, which would allow him to cut the budget deficit more efficiently," Palombo said. "Due to the dirty campaigning and the GOP having a majority in the House, President Obama and the Democrats will have a difficult time dealing with the fiscal cliff," Palombo said.

Some students did not find that the policies of either Romney or Obama represented what they wanted in a president. Despite their chances at the polls, third party candidates received support from students who did not represent either the Republican and Democratic parties.

Senior Randa Lopez supported the Libertarian candidate Gary Johnson because she felt his political beliefs represented her better than the primary candidates.

"I voted for the third party candidate because I feel like that out of the two traditional parties neither one of them represented who I was and what I stand for, whereas the third party candidate did," Lopez said.

Students have very different political stances, but what they all had in common during this election season was a heightened interest in and awareness of political issues.

ALEXANDRIA CAMPUS

Nestled inside England Airpark, Northwestern State University's Alexandria campus is easily accessible. The majority of students attending this campus are nursing majors and with the support of Rapides Parish, these students get many opportunities to give back to their community.

The Alexandria campus offers several bachelor's degree programs including: business administration, criminal justice, nursing, radiologic sciences, social work and general studies. The master's degree programs offered are in nursing and education.

The community supports NSU at Alexandria. The business and manufacturing sector depends on the graduates from their area. Without the students graduating and going back into the community, Alexandria would not be the booming center that it is now. "One of the neat things I have seen here already is the convenience of people with families being able to reside here," Jason Parks, executive director of the satellite campus said.

"I love it here. The instructors here in Alexandria are amazing, they really take the time to help each student and they really care," Jenny Abel, senior nursing major, said. "I'm not sure what all the students take part in, but I am in SNA and we do walks and bake sales as well to earn money to give back to the community." According to Abel, the campus is also very user friendly, quiet and has equipment great for students. "The Rapides Hospital is a great place to practice your skills, the dummies provided there are very helpful," Abel said.

"I am currently volunteering for Life Share Blood Centers of Alexandria at blood drives in the area as well as the Natchitoches area," Laura Nygren, senior radiology major, said. "I think that within the radiology program here in Alexandria, we are definitely involved in the community." Nygren is also a member of the CENLA Association of Radiology Students (CARS).

NSU takes great pride in giving back to the surrounding area. According to Nygren, CARS recently donated $100 worth of baby supplies as well as women's hygiene supplies to the Turning Point Battered Women's Shelter.

"We went to high schools and junior high schools and talked about hygiene, community health and safety," said senior BSN major Brittany Fausphouls.

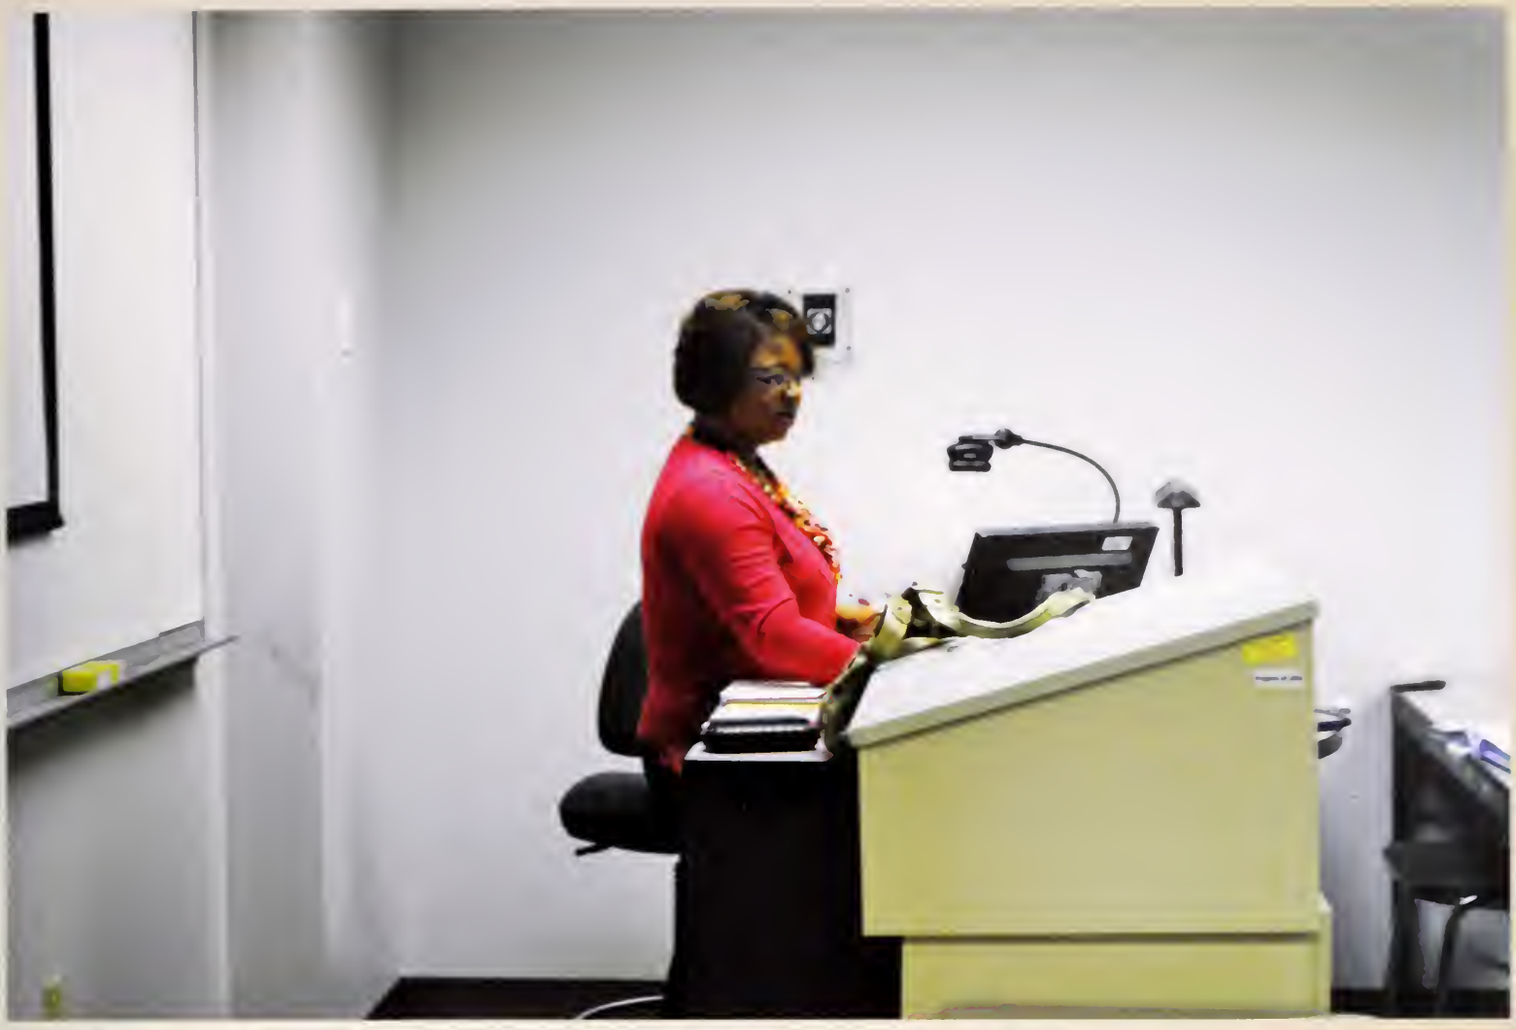

"We participate in the Susan G. Komen and heart associate walk and also hold fundraisers and participate in a walk for March of Dimes, said Kyle Holloway, a senior BSN major. "It brings a little school spirit to the community."

Adding to the list of community involvement, students also collect toys to give to local area hospitals, according to Carolyn Hartt, RN, and MSN coordinator of nursing. Nursing students stay actively involved in activities and benefits in Rapides Parish.

Alexandria is a perfect location for a Northwestern campus. Fellow Demons are doing so much for the community while also furthering their education.

impacting the community

The NSU campus located in Alexandria offers a variety of courses and degree programs to local students. "The campus originally came about when this was an Air Force base," said Carolyn Hartt, RN, and MSN coordinator of nursing for the Alexandria campus. "The Air Force has their own community college so they chose NSU as the closest local college in the 1970s to offer four-year degrees. NSU was on the base in the 70s and started offering classes." From there, it has evolved into a satellite campus that is convenient for many local students.

Jason Parks, a 1992 Northwestern graduate, is the new executive director for the Alexandria campus. Parks feels the purpose of Alexandria campus is "to align programs with the needs of the business and industry. The business community as a whole is gearing up for some great things to happen in the future."

There is a trend of students transferring from the satellite campuses to the main campus in Natchitoches. "One of the neat things I have seen here already is the convenience of people with families being able to reside here. This is the doorway to help them get acclimated to the college environment," said Parks.

"This campus receives a lot of community support so we are an integral part of education that is going on in Rapides Parish. We offer courses and some degree programs," said Hartt.

Not only do students of the Alexandria campus receive support, but faculty and staff are active on many community boards, including the Chamber of Commerce.

"Nursing and radiology, social work, criminal justice, business and the LAP program are offered here," said Peggy Lodridge, Alexandria campus manager. "We try to provide as many services for the students as possible so that they don't have to travel to main campus to take care of their business." For many students, this campus is a short commute.

The pinning ceremony is a tradition that most nursing majors long to take part in. "At the end of every graduation we get pinned and we take an oath to serve our duties as nurses to the community," said Donovan Philips, a senior BSN major. According to Lodridge, the pinning ceremony is held on the Alexandria campus for the students graduating from there.

The Alexandria campus might be small, but it is impacting the community in big ways. Students are eager to get into the field and provide services while gaining experience. Thanks to the communities' willingness to help, students are eager to get in the work force and give back to their communities.

A LITTLE GOES A LONG WAY

Leesville students serve their local community

Community support plays an important role in a college's success and the NSU Leesville/Fort Polk campus is no exception. This campus receives support from not only the community of Leesville, but also the military base, Fort Polk. On this campus, one will find a mix of civilians, active duty military students and students here with their family who are in the military.

Devonte Rogers, freshman biology major, said, "I am a military student and I was born in Mississippi. I would say most people come here from the military. This is a good campus to start off at."
"I am able to drive back and forth from home, and I can get the feel of college," said Ariel Dowden, a freshman majoring in secondary math education. Going directly to college from high school, where there is a set schedule every day, can be challenging. "I think the worst part about it is the waiting between classes. It's a lot different from high school where you have a set schedule," said Dowden. "In my classes, there are more students coming back for a degree." This small campus allows for not just students right out of high school, but anyone pursuing a degree the opportunity to do so.

Some students on the Leesville campus are far from the typical student. Shane Freman, freshman secondary social studies major, is an assistant football coach at Leesville High School, works at the local Pentecostal church and is running for city council. "I was a licensed surveyor in San Antonio," said Freman. "I moved back home and started working at Leesville High School and now I'm going back to college. Working in the school pushes me to get my degree."

The Student Nursing Association holds a sock drive annually that benefits the community's nursing home. "SNA gives everyone a whole package of socks," said Joyce Barnes, the nursing advisor on the Leesville/Fort Polk campus. The Leesville/Fort Polk campus also supports the Wounded Warrior Program. In the spring semester of 2012, Barnes helped raise $3,000 for the program from cooking meals and selling them every Wednesday and sewing a quilt and selling raffle tickets. Community involvement keeps the college thriving, and these are just a few of the many ways this campus gives back to its community.

The NSU campus located in Leesville originated to provide the military personnel stationed at Fort Polk the opportunity to pursue a college degree. "Northwestern entered with a contract through the Army to set up a campus more than 30 years ago," said history professor Dr. Kathleen Smith. "The deal was if NSU would keep a campus and make it assessable to military, after 30 years the campus land would come to Northwestern and the land would be legally signed over to us."

After 30 years of being strictly the NSU Fort Polk campus, it is now known to everyone as the Leesville and Fort Polk campus. The campus thrives because of the diverse military personnel who attend the college. While traditions may be difficult to get started on this campus, what lacks in tradition of the school is made up by the meeting of diverse people, coming from all over the country.

It is difficult to get traditions started on the campus since the students are constantly coming and going, whether it is military moving or students going to the main campus in Natchitoches. However, efforts are being made to get students involved in the campus life. Library Associate Anna McDonald wants to start traditions. "Last year Julie Kane came from the main campus to read poetry and signed books," said McDonald. "There is a mixed group of students, young students coming out of high school, but also the older students pursuing degrees, but I am looking at traditions we can start." There was a Coke rewards party held in the campus library and the SGA from the main campus got the Leesville campus involved by holding a crawfish boil for them during the spring semester.

over 125 years in the making

Northwestern State University of Louisiana was started in 1884 in the Bullard Mansion on a hill overlooking the river port city of Natchitoches. A portion of the campus belonged to the Bullard family.

The State Legislature, by Act 51 of 1884, created the Louisiana State Normal School for the educational preparation of teachers. From 1856 to 1918 the Normal School offered two years of study for aspiring teachers.

The campus expanded as time went by to become Louisiana Normal College in 1921.

In 1944, the school became Northwestern State College and then Northwestern State University in 1970 after Governor John J. McKeithen signed the legislative act that changed the school's name to what it is today.

In 1980, the area where the columns stand was entered into the National Register of Historic Places underneath the name "Normal Hill Historic District."

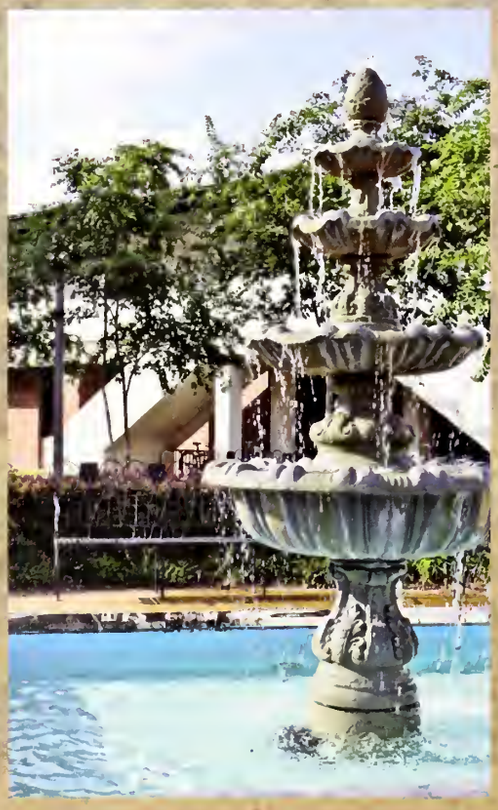

Over 125 years later, three columns remain of the original structure on what is now known as Normal Hill in a National Historic District. The Louisiana Normal College played a significant role in educational development throughout the state. The institution is the oldest continually occupied establishment for higher education in Louisiana.

Northwestern State College became the first college under the jurisdiction of the Louisiana State Board of Education to offer the master's degree. It expanded to the south and west as the college grew. Throughout the years, satellite campuses developed in Shreveport, Alexandria and Fort Polk.

Today, its Distance Learning Program allows students across the world to study at Northwestern.

Northwestern State University of Louisiana is on land committed to learning for over 100 years.

a campus connected to the community

Community service is no stranger to NSU. From the many recognized student organizations to the athletic department, NSU betters the community. The Office of Service Learning is not an exception.

Service learning is a teaching technique in which students participate in a community service activity that is clearly related to the academic objectives of a course or a major field of study.

Steve Gruesbeck, director of the Office of Service Learning, said although the Office of Service Learning is only four years old at NSU, faculty and students have been participating in service learning for years.

"What I discovered is that it actually has been going on for a long time," Gruesbeck said. "Some people called it service learning, some called it volunteer work. The terms differed, but the act of getting students out into the community to practice what they learned in the classroom was the same."

Service learning is used as a teaching tool in more than 40 different 1000 through 3000 level courses taught in each of NSU's four colleges, as well as the Scholar's College.

The Boys & Girls Club, Pineville Jr. High, Council on Aging and Volunteers of America are just a few of the community partners that have collaborated with students and faculty in the past.

Nearly 1, 400 students have been involved with service. With a cumulative average of over 26, 700 hours dedicated to service, NSU keeps a strong connection to its community.

"Service learning is where the rubber meets the road," Gruesbeck said. "Students get the opportunity to practice and demonstrate what they've learned."

Gruesbeck's background played a significant contributing factor in his role in the Office of Service Learning today.

"I have worked in the field of student retention for 11 years," Gruesbeck said. "It's always important for me to engage students in education. I want them to graduate."

Gruesbeck said students who participate in service learning are more likely to remember the information taught in class because they're applying it in real life situations.

That, in turn, increases the likelihood that they will do well in the course. Gruesbeck also predicts those students are more likely to graduate with priceless experience which makes them better prepared for the real world.

Gerra Perkins, coordinator of M.A. Counseling, is one faculty member who incorporates service learning into her courses.

Recently, students had to choose an issue adolescents are facing today and design a curriculum that would include techniques on how to solve them to place in a junior high school.

Students were given credit for the curriculum design, but the decision to help implement the design was completely up to the students.

Perkins said the experience was not only beneficial to the community, but for the students as well as they received priceless experience in helping adolescents.

"When we were at Pineville, they treated my students great," Perkins said. "They were able to learn within their setting."

"It's engaging because I care about the future of counseling," Perkins said. "It's exciting to this program to produce professionals that are dedicated and passionate about what they want to change."

natchitoches elects a new mayor

City of Natchitoches

Lee Posey took the office of Mayor in June 2012. He was born in Coushatta, but has lived in Natchitoches for 52 years.

Posey said he's always found ways to contribute to the community. He served on the City Council for 20 years, coached Dixie Youth sports and served on the Boys & Girls Club board.
Although he was an active citizen, he had no idea one day he would run for mayor.

"I've been involved in the community in a lot of ways," Posey said. "I love the community. I'm humbled to serve the people of Natchitoches. I'm very fortunate to serve the community I grew up in."

Serving as a mayor means you're always busy. Posey says he and the department heads prioritize issues to decide which to tackle first. He attends several meetings a week, makes decisions on issues and completes loads of paperwork, but still makes time to talk to concerned citizens.

He tries to personally return calls because he feels that it is important to connect with citizens of the community.

"I try to get back with people when they have issues to discuss," Posey said. "I don't pass it off to someone else."

But Posey said he couldn't take all of the credit. Several people are behind the scenes to help things flow smoothly.

According to Posey, the former mayor, Wayne McCullen, was excellent in selecting city personnel, city department heads and city employees.

"They do a great job," Posey said. "We've got a good group in place. It really makes my job easier."

Several people have written notes or have stopped by his office to compliment city officials and show gratitude for the good work that they do.

"We're blessed to have the people we have," Posey said.

One of the best aspects about his job as mayor is hearing what others think about Natchitoches while he's traveling.

"I love the reputation that our community has," Posey said. "When I travel throughout the state, people tell me how great Natchitoches is. It's such a positive recognition of our university and our city. I love to hear that. Sometimes we beat ourselves up and there's always room for improvements, but Natchitoches really is a wonderful city."

The mayor's main vision for the city is to strengthen the weaknesses of the community.

"When I lay my head on my pillow I'd like to know that I tried to make Natchitoches that best community that I could," Posey said.

"We've got a very strong and great community," he said. "We're going to do everything we can to do the best we can."

traditions building lasting memories

Northwestern State University's Shreveport campus is no different than the main campus when it comes to community service.

Contributing to the community has long time been part of the College of Nursing and Allied Health.

Department Head Pamela Simmons said students are involved in several activities to contribute to the community.

"We're the largest producer of nurses in our area," Simmons said. "We provide our city and surrounding areas with quality professionals."

The Shreveport campus is home to hundreds of nursing students from Shreveport and even places such as California.

"I believe students are drawn here because of the quality of our program, " Simmons said. "We have extensive training for the students and real-life environments for them to learn in."

The students often collaborate with non-profit organizations such as the Red Cross and the Shreveport and Bossier Rescue Mission.

"The students meet with the Red Cross at least three times a year," Simmons said. "They provide lab work for the community for a nominal fee."

The lab work provided allows citizens to get their blood pressure checked, as well as a few tests run by the Red Cross.

Grad student Angela Wills said she's received the best training by actually working with the community.

"The lessons you learn while you're actually performing the tasks are priceless," Wills said. "It's beats sitting in a classroom and watching demonstrations. We get to interact with the community and make real contributions to the community."

Radiologic Science Department Head Laura Aaron said the best part of allowing the students to get training in a real environment is that the community is able to give back to the students.

"Different agencies and facilities like Willis-Knighton are very generous to us," Aaron said. "While our students give to them, they give back to our students because they have a place to get priceless hands-on training."

The College of Nursing and Allied Health offers a variety of ways for anyone to donate funds. The Endowed Scholarship for the College of Nursing and Allied Health, the Nursing Support and Scholarship Fund and the Endowed Professorship for the College of Nursing and Allied Health are just three of the nine ways to give back.

SHREVEPORT CAMPUS

preparing for the real world

Since 1949, hundreds of students have been a part of the NSU nursing department at the Shreveport campus. Many students have walked the halls, stressed over their tests and learned the art of saving lives.

In 1968, the bachelor of science in radiologic technology program was created and quickly joined the nursing program as one of the best in the nation. With both of these programs, Northwestern State University-Shreveport was complete. These two programs work hard at keeping current and relevant in order to give their students the best chances at finding a job. The students spend hours every day learning the ins and outs of the human body and how best to treat patients to make them better. The Shreveport campus is a community of people working towards the same goals.

One of the things that helped to build that community are the traditions that the students go through. Dr. Pamela Simmons, the department head of the nursing program in Shreveport agrees that traditions play an important part in a student's college experience. Simmons said, "It is a way to connect each class with classes before them and classes that will come after them." The nursing campus has a tradition of the "pinning ceremony." Starting more than 30 years ago, students plan and participate in a recognition ceremony that involves receiving their nursing pin (unique to each nursing school across the United States). The ceremony involves student speeches, the reciting of the Nightingale Pledge and faculty speakers who spend the evening reminiscing about previous classes or students and ending with the faculty welcoming the students as colleagues. "Family and friends arrive in great numbers (hundreds) to share in the ceremony – in large beautiful venues," Simmons said. "It helps remind those who witness it today of 'their time' years before."

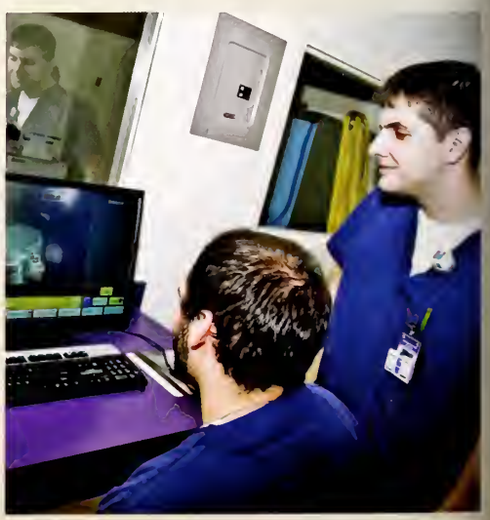

Traditions and history are important, and in the radiologic department, what the students learn may have changed, but how they learn has stayed the same. "Besides adding in compressed video and using the electronic platform of Moodle, we really don't do things much different than we did years ago," Kelli Hayes, program director and associate professor in the radiologic department said. "We still have classroom lectures, laboratory simulations and clinical experiences. This formula has proven successful for our program." Working in the medical field is not easy and it is hard to live in the past when everyday new discoveries and new, better ways of doing things are invented." Hayes said , "I feel the advancements to the profession, as a whole, have all been positive, I can't imagine moving backward. Moving forward is what keeps us viable." Dr. Norann Planchock, dean of the Shreveport campus, agrees, "The modern advancements brought about by technology have taken us further than we could ever have dreamed. With these new advancements have come a better quality of life and a longer life—thus, we are the beneficiaries of these innovative approaches."

In order to work in the medical field, a person needs to be compassionate and giving. It is hard work and long hours, but the people in those fields all share a common goal of helping people. History and tradition help build lasting friendships and communities, and at the Shreveport campus, traditions build camaraderie and lasting memories.

MONDAY

Kick-off Block Party

"I think the students had a lot of fun, better than I expected," senior Robin Maxile said. "There was a lot more to do and I think it was a good way to kick off my senior homecoming week."

TUESDAY

Are You Smarter Than A Freshman?

WEDNESDAY

5K Run

"The run was brutal because I didn't train for it, but I would definitely do it again next year," sophomore Chris Gist said. "I would just make sure to train the next time."

THURSDAY FRIDAY SATURDAY

Lip-sync

"I really enjoy going to lip sync year after year because it shows off everyone's creativity and hard work!" Chelsea Giles, graduate student, said.

Homecoming Parade and Pep Rally

Homecoming Game

"Tailgating was my favorite part. Seeing how everyone came together as a whole on Game Day," junior Latresha Easter said. "I loved how all the old and new Greeks were united and the food wasn't too bad either!" "I loved seeing the alumni come back and the fact that we won the homecoming game made going out that night so much more enjoyable," junior Kyla Harrell said.

HOMECOMING PARADE

superhero spectacular

Throughout the years, many things at Northwestern State change, but one thing that remains tradition is the homecoming parade and pep rally, capping off the week's festivities.

The Student Activities Board planned events for an entire week to keep students entertained but nothing showed off their creative skills and school spirit more than the parade and float competition.

"The parade is my favorite part of homecoming week," Randa Lopez, a senior communication major said, "I like seeing all the floats and how they showcase the talent we have here at NSU!"

The parade included NSU's very own royalty, the 2012 Homecoming Honor Court. Made up of 22 students, the honor court brought prestige to the parade riding in colorful sports cars, throwing candy to the Natchitoches community. Along with the honor court and organization floats, the Lip-sync Homecoming Hunnies winners Shannon Bryd and Stephen Lawson, as well as the football team and spirit groups participated.

Reigning over the honor court were Homecoming King and Queen Kiley Louviere of Houma and Afton Owens of Homer. Both students were proud to be chosen by the students to represent NSU and were excited about riding in the parade.

This was both Louviere's and Owens' final homecoming and they were eager to go out with a bang.

"My favorite part is getting to spend the late nights with everyone working on the float and lip sync. The final products make the week worth while," Louviere said.

Hosting the Pep Rally downtown on the riverbank of Natchitoches were sophomore Kyla Winey and senior Nic Russo. Students were kept laughing and entertained as winners were announced from the banner, float and canned food competitions. The overall homecoming week winner was also announced with Phi Mu Fraternity taking first place.

According to Owens, homecoming week overall was a success and her love for the university stems back for generations. "I love that my entire family attended this university. It really allows us to bond over the history and tradition of NSU because it has become a tradition for my family," Owens said.

"In terms of homecoming, I really love everything, but if I had to pick a favorite part it would be game day. The tailgate, the alumni and families, the food and football, that is what homecoming is all about!"

MR. AND MISS NSU

Jake Bryan and Lauren Waguespack represent NSU

Seniors Jake Bryan and Lauren Waguespack were named Mr. and Miss NSU.

Beginning in 1956 and continuing the tradition today, Mr. and Miss NSU remain the highest honor a student can receive from their peers. SGA hosts the election each fall allowing NSU students to elect two of their peers. Mr. and Miss NSU are presented annually at a NSU home football game. These two students can be seen at other university events and activities throughout the year.

"I was surprised by the honor," Bryan said. "It means a lot to me to have been nominated for this award and that the students voted for me."

Bryan is an education major, member of the Demon football team, a former Freshman Connection orientation leader and a member of Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity.

According to Bryan it was important for him to get involved in other campus activities, besides just football.

"Getting involved is one of the keys to enjoying college," Bryan said. "The more I became involved, the more people I met and you never know how that could help you in the future."

Waguespack is a theatre major, former captain of the Demon Dazzlers, an officer in the Student Theatre Organization, a member of Sigma Sigma Sigma Sorority and the founder of NSU's Glee Club.

"This is a great honor for me especially when I consider some of the outstanding women who were previously chosen as Miss NSU," Waguespack said. "It shows the students at Northwestern care about involvement and appreciate it. This means everything to me."

According to Waguespack, she wasn't very involved in high school, but once she got to NSU she became a member of many organizations.

"Once I started getting involved, I couldn't say no when other opportunities came along," Waguespack said.

Both Waguespack and Bryan are proud to say they received a prestigious honor and are proud to call themselves Northwestern State Demons.

"Northwestern has been great for me," Bryan said. "It feels like you are part of a family here."

Student Activities Board

they do it for the students

Student Activities Board is a 27-student run organization that plans events for students on campus and at least one event each semester for other Northwestern State University campuses.

"It is a place to let creative juices flow," SAB President Solomon Matthews, senior social work major, said.

SAB plans homecoming events, Spring Fling and Vegas Night. These three events are considered SAB's traditional events. The events are put on every year. The Haunted House is an event that Matthews said is becoming a new tradition. The Haunted House was one of Rep at Large Rachel Belton's, junior accounting major, favorite events.

"I got to see students get scared by simple things," she said.

Homecoming week is the biggest event for SAB because it is the only event that is a week filled with many activities for students to attend. According to Matthews, homecoming week requires every SAB member. Following that event is Spring Fling. Even though it is one day, there is a lot of preparation.

To get students involved with the events, SAB breaks members down into committees: Up 'Til Dawn, Lady of the Bracelet, Freshman Factor and lagniappe. Lagniappe is the committee that runs the many other SAB events. Each committee has a member who is in charge of finding students to serve on that particular event. Any student was allowed to attend SAB open board meetings on Mondays.

Along with their traditional events, SAB holds their own traditions within the organization, like member of the week and Christmas party. Each week a member is chosen throughout the semester for their outstanding work.

"The best part about SAB is seeing all the positive reactions on Twitter and Facebook," Matthew said, "because we put that on."

There is still a challenge with getting students involved and getting an event's name out there enough, Matthew said. As a Rep at Large, Belton finds it hard to juggle events and school work, but SAB has been fun for her.

For junior accounting major LaKeita Bradley, SAB brings excitement to her life. "It's a great organization that gets students like me, who have nothing but school work to do, involved on campus," Bradley said.

Vegas Night is Bradley's favorite event because it gives her the vibe of a Vegas casino environment even though she is too young to attend a real one and has never been.

In the future, Matthews would like to see more students get involved.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION

building a partnership between faculty and students

Student Government Association, SGA, is a student-run organization that acts as a liaison between faculty and students. Consisting of over 20 students from different backgrounds, ages and interests, SGA is as diverse as the student body it looks over.

The organization recently moved to the first floor of the Student Union, which SGA President Derrick Houston said allows SGA to interact with students at a more frequent rate. Along with the move, SGA has worked harder than in previous years on the social media front. SGA is now publicized even more and they have even created more videos this year than in the past.

SGA's interaction with students keeps the organization aware of students' problems on campus and helps to build a community among NSU students and faculty.

"We ask, or they come by the office," Houston said. "I feel more students have become involved with SGA, and they feel a sense of warmth in our office."

Traditionally, SGA hosts "Meet Your Senate," "I Heart SGA Week" and they give out free scantrons to students who need them. The organization also runs all elections on campus like the Mr. and Miss NSU, homecoming elections, all senate and SAB elections. Also, they meet with faculty on a weekly to monthly basis to discuss the student concerns.

"To be the voice of NSU students is SGA's most important job," Houston said. "SGA exist because of the students." Senator Kyla Winey agreed. This is her first time serving as an SGA member, and she said she really enjoys connecting with other student leaders, talking to students and actually making a change on the NSU campus.

Winey and second-year member, treasurer Richard Chenvert, both agree that budgeting is the most challenging part of SGA. However, they don't let the budget keep them from making NSU a better place for students. They still look forward to the future and to the possible building of a new and improved Student Union that will better assist future Demons.

"SGA has been rewarding and stressful, but it's a experience I will never regret," Chenvert said.

As president, Houston said the position is eye opening to the improvement NSU can make, and, with help of SGA members and students, the improvements happen.

Houston describes the bond he shares with his fellow members and students as a family. "Thank you," Houston said. "Thank you for putting me in the office and allowing me to be your president."

CHRISTMAS GALA

the happiest time of year

The Christmas Gala is one of the most hectic times of the year for members of Creative and Performing Arts. From singers to costumers, the entirety of the department is working hard, long before the performances begin. While students may not enjoy the long nights and early days, the product is always equal to the amount of work put in.

Deanna Bourgeois, a sophomore majoring in nursing, has been involved in Gala twice. Although Bourgeois did not like missing school to practice and perform, she was always pleased with the outcome. "I honestly love everything about Gala," Bourgeois said. "The atmosphere, the performances, the response from the crowd, all of it. Gala is an amazing time for all of CAPA to come together and help usher in the Christmas season."

Bourgeois was part of Northwestern Lyric, a women's chorus at Northwestern, and also performed in the opening and closing acts of the 2012 Gala.

Behind the scenes, but just as integral to the performance, are costumers and stage managers. Kai'he Fisher, a freshman majoring in costume design, was the co-head of costuming for Gala. While Fisher was not excited by the early hours involved in costuming Gala, he did think the performance of the theatre and music majors was good.

"I don't like so much work," Fisher said, "but I love the dancing. The ballet was really great, in my opinion."

Matt Riley, adjunct professor of percussion, has participated in the Christmas Gala for three years. Although Riley spends a majority of the Gala in the orchestra, he enjoys watching the shows as well.

"I enjoy playing with the orchestra, so I think playing is the best part for me," Riley said. "But, watching-wise, I think drum line gets the most reaction from the crowd. Every skit has its own thing that I really enjoy, so it's really hard to pinpoint which one's my favorite."

Despite taking part in the pre-Thanksgiving practices, Riley agrees with many other students in regards to the outcome. "It's the only time in the whole years that all of CAPA comes together and does something as a unit, and that's probably the coolest part about the whole thing."

a joyous holiday

Traveling nearly a thousand miles, people from all over the nation come to Natchitoches, on the first weekend of December to see and experience the beginning of what is known as Christmas time.

There is much preparation that the town of Natchitoches puts forth, from stocking up on Christmas items to picking a theme design for the display windows and hanging lights over the streets. It takes hard work and long hours to turn this city into what is literally a city of lights. This year's 86th annual Festival of Lights brought in nearly 90,000 people. Business owners along Front Street spend weeks to prepare for the festivities and potential customers who view their vintage looking shops. Manager Corrie Brown, from clothing shop Hello Dolly states that owner Judy Davis makes sure to have a nice holiday line as well as nick-nacks such as scarfs, hats, gloves, and more and always has extra stock just for this time of year. David Clary, of Louisiana Purchase, a business that has been on Front Street for seven years now, states, "We don't get much sleep and work very hard for this time of year. Christmas Fest is what we live for and look forward to." At the Louisiana Purchase shop they stock up on extra Christmas items as well as prepare holiday famous fudge such as mint chocolate and amaralido flavors. Venders from all over come to serve those looking forward to the festive foods. Douge Jhones, vender of Smokin' Like You Like It, from Shreveport, travels around to five different states to mainly famous rodeo arenas, but always makes an effort to come to the Christmas festivities in Natchitoches. He has been vending for five years now and serves hardy meals such as Texas stuffed potatoes and steaks.

The Festival of Lights last 45 days, and the first weekend of December is known as the Christmas Festival to kick off the celebration of Christmas. It all begins with the 5K run starting at 7:45 a.m., tourists then can walk along Front Street and Second Street experiencing the old vintage feel of the road of bricks and the historic buildings and homes. The annual parade then begins at 1 p.m. consisting of a parade of motorcycles, a junior parade for children in which students from the NSU theater department dress as Christmas characters, as well as bands, dance groups and cheerleaders. From 3:30-9:30p.m. there is live entertainment provided from bands. The double fire work display, laser light show and dancing bridge display all choreographed to music began at 6 p.m. Tourists tend to come back every year to experience this festival. Retia Matthews from Alexandria, states the reason she always comes back is that, "There's nothing else like it. To see all the Christmas decorations and lights, the kind hearted people in this town, the Christmas Fest is truly a divine way to get into the Christmas holiday."

collier sings her way to the crown

Breanna Collier of Bossier City won the 55th annual Miss Northwestern Lady of the Bracelet Pageant.

"This is such a great honor for me and I promise to represent Northwestern State University to the best of my ability," said Collier.

Miss Northwestern Lady of the Bracelet, often referred to as LOB, is a scholarship pageant that also serves as a preliminary for the Miss Louisiana pageant. The program is put on by the Student Activities Board.

"I never knew this position would be so rewarding. I worked hard, stressed out and spent countless days in SAB Director Yonna Pasch's office to insure that this production was a success," said LOB Committee Head Alayni Guidry.

This production is very popular on campus and according to Guidry, she took on the task to plan it for the Student Activities Board, Northwestern State University and our 2013 Lady of the Bracelet, Breanna Collier.

The Lady of the Bracelet pageant first began in 1958 where Kahne Dipola was crowned the first Lady of the Bracelet. She received a gold bracelet to wear for the following year when representing the university in public. The NSU Potpourri staff originally sponsored the pageant in the early 20s.

Contestants compete in several categories including swimsuit, evening wear, talent and interview where the judges score them on poise, performance and overall stage presence. Collier sang her way to the top, as she was the talent winner of the evening.

Collier is a sophomore theatre major. She will now compete this summer in the Miss Louisiana Pageant, held in Monroe. She is the daughter of Michael Collier Sr. and Mary Collier. She is a member of the Demon Dazzlers, NSU Glee Club, Student Theatre Organization and Phi Mu Fraternity.

Collier's life ambition is to one day be on Broadway in New York City, and also be in films or start to record music of her own.

Kyla Winey of Lafayette received first runner up, second runner up went to Alyson Humphrey of Bossier City and third runner up went to Bailee Cartwright of Holdenville, Okla.

Collier also won the Liz Carroll People's Choice Award, after being selected by the pageant audience. The swimsuit winner was Lakyn Ward of Leesville. Humphrey was selected Miss Congeniality as voted on by the contestants.

UP 'TIL DAWN

they do it for the kids

"No child should die in the dawn of life!" is the steady tune that St. Jude Children's Research Hospital and Up 'til Dawn marches to. St. Jude Children's Research Hospital is internationally recognized for its ground breaking efforts in finding cures and saving the lives of children with cancer and other life threatening diseases.

St. Jude freely shares its discoveries with scientific and medical communities around the world. St. Jude is the only pediatric cancer research center where families never pay for treatment not covered by insurance. No child is ever denied treatment because of the family's inability to pay.

Up 'til Dawn is a student- led, student run program that has been hosted by more than 375 colleges and universities across the country since the program's start in 1999.

The program is made up of faculty, staff and students in the race to find cures and fight against pediatric cancer and other childhood infirmities.

Recognized student organizations are encouraged to contribute, as well as anyone on campus.

Senior communications major Richard Chenvert has a special tie to St. Jude Children's Hospital because it is the main organization that his fraternity raises funds for.

"Danny Thomas was the founder of St. Jude Hospital and he was also a member of Theta Chi Fraternity, Incorporated," Chenvert said.

Chenvert said the organization is important to him because it's saving lives.

"It's providing for families who wouldn't have the money to take care of their loved ones otherwise," Chenvert said.

"Up 'til Dawn Executive Director and senior business major Michael Stephenson said he fell in love with the mission of Up 'til Dawn his freshman year.

"It's such a good cause," Stephenson said. "It gives me a good feeling to know that I'm contributing to something bigger than myself."

Since his freshman year, Stephenson has worked with Up 'til Dawn and has even decided to contribute to the cause post graduation.

"My experience with Up 'til Dawn has been life changing," Stephenson said. "Working with this organization confirmed my future plans. It's kind of shown me the light. This is what I want to do forever."

He wants to become a representative for St. Jude Children's Hospital and eventually a doctor.

Up 'til Dawn Faculty Advisor Yonna Pasch feels fortunate to work with students like Michael.

"It's amazing to see how much of an impact students can have when they find their passion," Pasch said. "It's amazing to see what they can do with it."

Last spring, more than 500 students attended the Up 'til Dawn to fight cancer. As of July 13, 2012, Up 'til Dawn raised over $23,000.

Every dollar counts. According to the Up 'til Dawn website, during the past three years, 84 cents of every dollar received supported the research and treatment at St. Jude. The daily operating cost is nearly $1.4 million, which is primarily covered by public contributions.

The program was nationally recognized at the 2012 St. Jude Collegiate Leadership Seminar. Pasch was selected as "Up 'til Dawn Advisor of the Year" and Executive Director Michael Stephenson was awarded the $1,000 "2012 Danny Thomas Leadership Scholarship."

more than a woman

Primping, plucking, shaving and tucking are verbs that are usually attached to women getting ready, however, for Sigma Alpha Iota's fundraiser, Lady of the Night, the men are the ones spending hours on their appearance. Lady of the Night, LON, is a cross dressing pageant that has been entertaining NSU students for over a decade. Bill Brent, director of the Creative and Performing arts, said, "I'm not sure of the exact year [LON started] but I know that this has been an annual event for at least 15 years. SAI uses this to help raise funds for their projects and I think the participants are really generous to assist the sorority each year. It's a lot of fun and a worthy cause!"

Buying wigs, borrowing bras and dresses and learning to walk in heels is only half the battle. Taylor Anderson, winner of LON and senior vocal music education major, said, "You find helping hands in unexpected places when you decide to cross dress for charity" These men are judged on talent, formal wear and interview and it takes most of them hours to get dressed. "I had to run home as soon as I was done with classes that day to get ready! It took me like 3-4 hours with two people helping me and we didn't make my performance outfit until the last hour before the pageant!" said Anderson.

LON is the biggest fundraiser that SAI does and it has become a tradition for the members. Kelsey Ranking, senior English major and SAI member said, "Lady of the Night is so important to SAI for many reasons, including the fact that it increases our presence on campus. This used to be an event exclusive to CAPA, but this past year we had more involvement from students who are not directly involved in music at NSU. It's awesome to see different students come together to have fun and raise money to support music." Sarah Solis, sophomore HMT major and member of SAI, said about LON, "In SAI, our passion is music. We like to give back to the community and help to keep music in schools. Many ways that we can continue to do this is through our fundraisers. Lady of the Night is, and has been for quite a few years, one of our most successful fundraisers that many look forward to each year. It helps raise funds, while promoting our professional women's fraternity, and also helping our cause to support music, which is our main goal. That is why we love this pageant, beside all the ladies love to see these men in dresses!"

Sigma Alpha Iota is an International Music Fraternity founded in 1903. Every year the women of SAI work hard raising money for various philanthropies across campus, in the community, around the state and throughout the world.

PHI MU'S VERA BRADLEY BINGO

phi mu philanthropy

Greek organizations on campus are well known for having unique traditions. These organizations not only recite their traditions through creed, but also live it through service and philanthropy.

Phi Mu is well known for their philanthropic support of the Children's Miracle Network. What makes Phi Mu unique is one of the ways they go about raising money for this worthy cause: the annual Vera Bradley Bingo.

The annual event started in fall 2010 at a church on Second Street and now takes advantage of the spacious Prather Coliseum. Each semester, Phi Mu tries to raise at least $5,000 for CMN.

According to Phi Mu member Emily Pacheco, they collected $5,000 just from the ticket sales. "Everything we raise goes to St. Francis Carbini, which is a CMN hospital in Alexandria," Pacheo said.

Phi Mu Philanthropy Committee Head Amanda Bain said the group visits the hospital every semester. According to Bain, the money raised for the hospital is used to buy important materials such as medicine and medical supplies. "Everything the children need there we give to them," Bain said.

Sophomore Nicholas Myers attended the event and enjoyed the pleasant atmosphere. "All of the Phi Mu's working were really nice. There were always people helping," Myers said.

The Children's Miracle Network is a cause everyone in Phi Mu is very dedicated to, which is shown by the effort put into the Vera Bradley Bingo.

"VB Bingo is always so much fun. It is an amazing opportunity because we are able to give back to a foundation that we all care so much about, and we are able to have fun and interact with individuals from all around the university and community while doing so," Phi Mu member Brandi Vincent said.

The College of Arts, Letters, Graduate Studies and Research provides an undergraduate education in the social and behavioral sciences, languages, communication, English and the creative and performing arts. Faculty members in the college, educated in the finest universities both in the United States and abroad, are dedicated to teaching using traditional and non-traditional instructional methods, as well as modern information technologies. # arts, letters and traditions

Among the five departments, there are many traditions within the College of Arts, Letters, Graduate Studies and Research umbrella. The most attended and well-known tradition is an annual scholarship and awards banquet that is hosted every April.

The College of Arts Scholarship Banquet is a three-year-old program that awards both student graduate and undergraduate students. The first banquet was in 2009.

"It was originally a campus wide honors banquet, but then it got too big," Dean Steve Horton said. "After we realized it was too big, that's when the colleges split to make their own honors banquet."

Horton said typically about 400 students are invited along with their family and friends. At the banquet, the dean announces the awards and scholarships along with the recipient. The recipient is called to the stage, then has the opportunity to shake the hand of their scholarship donor and take pictures.

Last April, over 60 scholarships were given in a cumulative amount of $25,000. The recipient are chosen by departmental criteria by faculty members. Many of the awards and scholarships require the recipient to have a certain GPA, major or background.

"We also recognize everybody that is graduating in that academic year," Horton said.

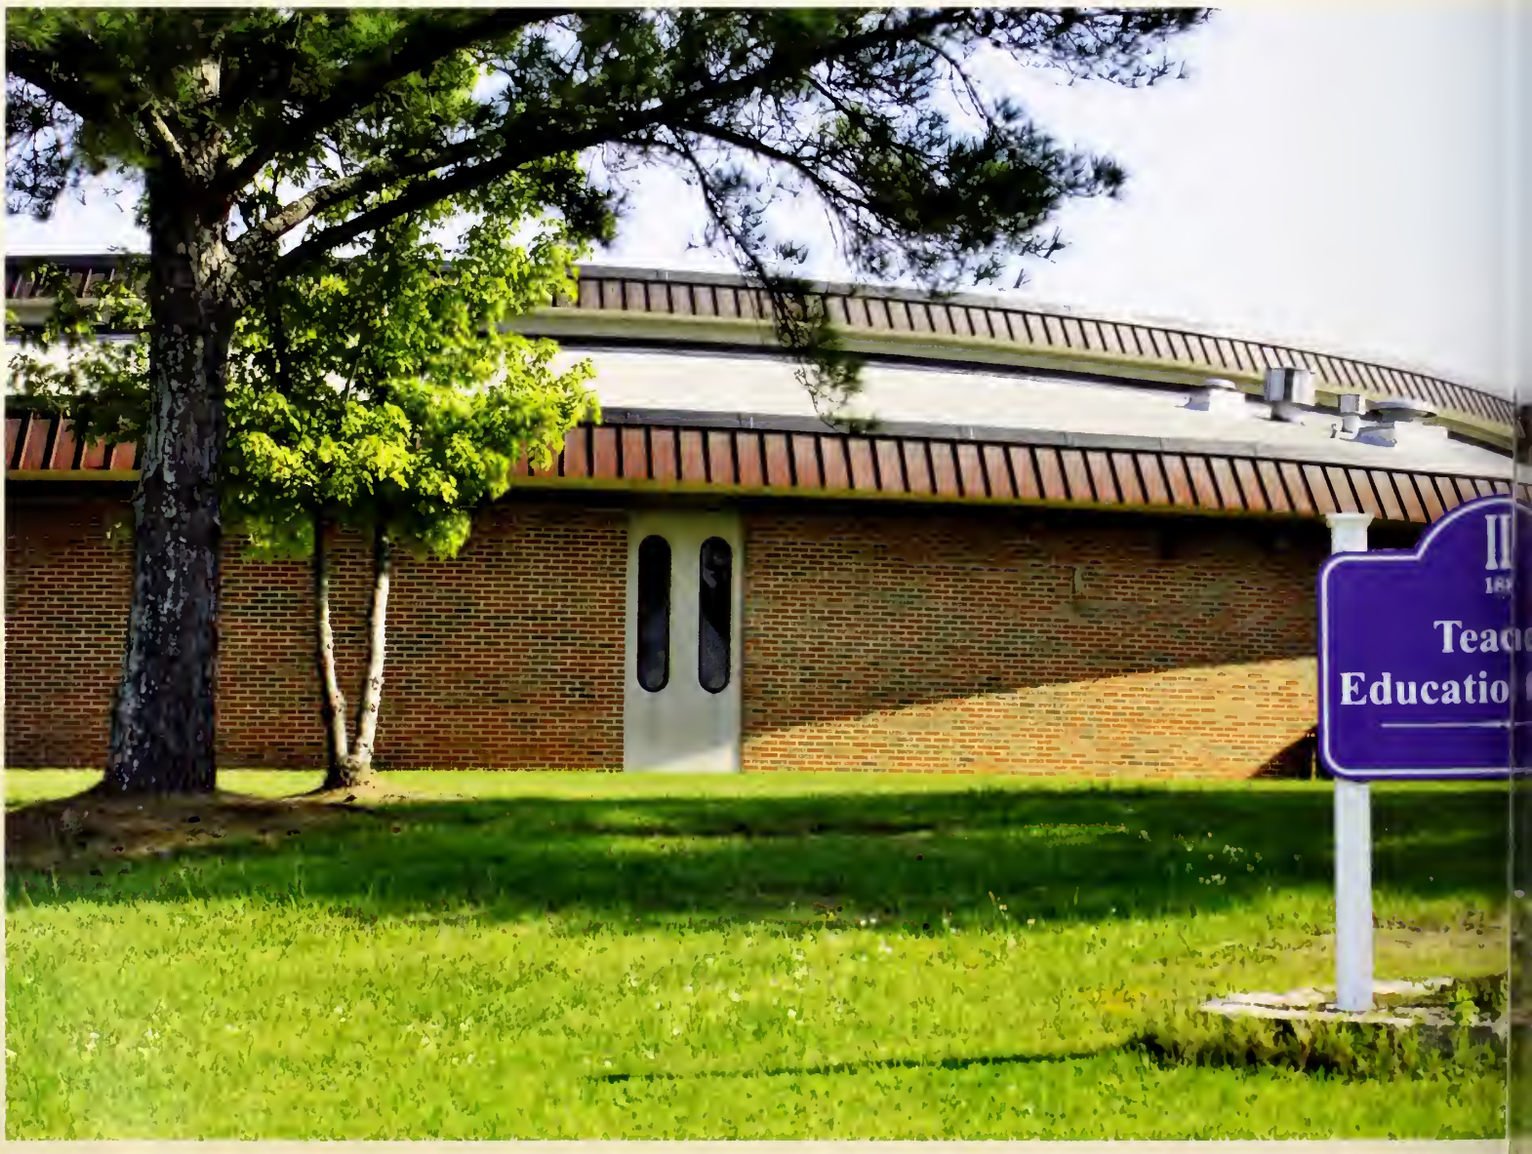

Another great tradition is the Reads held in both the spring and fall. The Reads bring out tons of children, students, professors and others who enjoy listening to the works of various authors. Each semester the theme for Read! is chosen and faculty and students alike are asked to read their favorite works as well perform and see works of art created in different classes on campus. "One of the most popular literary events on campus is Language and Communication's Fall and Spring Reads," said Dr. Sarah McFarland, head of the department of Language and Communication. "The brainchild of Michelle Pichon and Lori LeBlanc, the Reads! pack the reading room at Watson Library with students, faculty, staff and community members eager to hear original literary works, famous works about the theme and to see the amazing seasonal decorations. For example, the Fall Read hosts the beautiful Dia de los Muertos altars, Calacas and Catrinas made by our students in our Spanish classes; volunteers from across campus are asked to participate in reading on the spooky fall theme and we even have had musical accompaniments!"

"Read is so much fun because you get to see your professors and friends in a different light. It's also great because you can show off your work to the people you respect and look up to and have them say, 'Good Job'. It makes me feel like I don't fail as a college student," said Randa Lopez, senior organizational communication major.

The Reads are a chance for students and teachers to come together over a love of literature.

GALLASPY COLLEGE OF EDUCATION AND HUMAN DEVELOPMENT

College of Education and Human Development Goals

The Gallaspy College of Education and Human Development has many goals for their students. According to Dean Dr. Vickie Gentry, one is to prepare teachers and other school leader personnel for their daily work in K-12 settings. She said the college wants to prepare personnel for their work in higher education or community health settings. Their goal is also to prepare exercise leaders, athletics trainers, health educators, and sport administrators for their work in health, wellness and athletic settings. "We are ensuring that the College of Education and Human Development faculty are maintaining currency in their field of expertise and sharing their knowledge and skills with candidates," Gentry said. "Faculty are modeling best practice, and candidates are gaining field and clinical experience as they matriculate throughout their program."

Dean:

Dr. Vickie S. Gentry

Before becoming Northwestern State University, NSU was first known as the Louisiana Normal School. The normal school taught students how to become teachers for the K-12 setting and was the first institution in the state to certify teachers. In existence for over 125 years, the College of Education and Human Development is now preparing approximately 1,650 students to become teachers and educational leaders like principals, counselors and educational technology specialists for their daily work. The college also prepares exercise leaders, athletic trainers, health educators and sport administrators for their work in health, wellness and athletic settings. Dr. Vickie Gentry, the dean of the College of Education and Human Development, was appointed in Jan. 2004. Gentry described her years as dean as "very challenging, yet rewarding." The college has survived two national accreditation visits in 2005 and 2011, as well as multiple teacher and school leader program redesigns. Model for Learning is the college's theme with the expectations that faculty and candidates model effective practice in their field of study. The College of Education has been recognized nationally, giving the dean a chance to speak at events like American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education's Day on the Hill, National Council for Accreditation Orientation of Teacher Education and AACTE National Conference. This year the name of the college has changed to Gallaspy College of Education and Human Development to acknowledge Mary Rives Gallaspy and her family for their contribution to NSU.

Dr. Bill Dickenson

Dr. Bill Dickenson, one of the Department of Health and Human Performances' professors, has been teaching for 45 years, 25 of which have been at NSU. The department is housed in the newly named Gallaspy College of Education and Human Development. Dickenson has faced challenges, but overall he described his years of teaching as a great experience.

One tradition that the department has is at the end of the year a male and female athlete are recognized on their academic performance over the school year. "It is important to have traditions because it gives students something to look forward to," Dickenson said. He even holds his own tradition by volunteering to help out with athletics on campus, like keeping the scorebook for basketball. Dickenson said he likes to see the different perspectives of his students from the classroom setting to his students out in the community.

Over the years, much has changed for Dickenson. "Certainly, technology has changed," Dickenson said. Now, teachers and students rely on technology more and less people to people interaction. Also, it has changed for students because more students have to work to get through college. "It takes some of their priority from their learning situation," Dickenson said.

As a professor, Dickenson's key moments are during graduation. He likes to meet parents because it is a special time for both parents and students. It is also a transition into adulthood for students. "It's an opportunity for you to use what you learned in class," Dickenson said.

Even though Dickenson has spent many years teaching, he knows his time will soon come to an end, he said. He continues to teach until that time comes. "I just love teaching," Dickenson said.

traditions of the college of education and human development

Standing for over 125 years, the College of Education and Human Development holds NSU's longest standing tradition. The college was first institution in the state to certify teachers and the first to meet NCATE accreditation standards. It has continued to be accredited by NACATE since 1954.

"We recognize alumni who have excelled in their careers," Dr. Vickie Gentry said. Gentry serves as the department head of the College of Education and Human Development. The Hall of Distinguished Educators is one of the newest traditions the college has. Outstanding students are inducted into NSU's Hall of Distinguished Educators and their names are posted on a plaque in the common area of the Teach Education Center. "We maintain high standards for our candidates in all academic programs," Gentry said.

COLLEGE OF NURSING AND ALLIED HEALTH ADMINISTRATION

intense and hands on learning

The College of Nursing and Allied Health is an intense and hands on learning facility. In order to advance to clinicals, students must apply with a minimum GPA of 2.7 and a Test of Essential Academic Skills (TEAS) test score of 70-80 percent. The clinical programs are only able to except 10 nursing students per every nursing teacher. This slims the number of students able to advance into the nursing field. The higher the GPA and TEAS score, the better the chances of a student's acceptance. This is why the nursing field is so competitive. The College of Nursing and Allied Health offers students the opportunity to practice patient care, dealing with the specific conditions of the particular patient. Students are required to go to the hospital's clinical programs two days a week, as well as the required classroom courses.

Dean:

Dr. Norann Planchock

The College of Nursing and Allied Health Administration first began in 1949 due to the need for improvement in nursing education for the northwest Louisiana area. In order to make the improvement, the Shreveport hospital schools of nursing agreed to team up with the nursing programs of Northwestern Sate University. The Shreveport area hospitals did away with the two-year diploma and four-year baccalaureate degree programs in 1958 and turned to furnished clinical learning programs within the local hospitals.

The associate degree of nursing program was implemented in 1972, and has maintained continuing accreditation by the Council of the Nation League of Nursing. In 2005, the name of the associate degree of nursing was changed to Associate of Science Nursing Degree.

Beta Chi, the first chapter of Sigma Theta Tau International to be formed in Louisiana, was chartered at NSU in 1976. Beta Chi is an honor society available to graduate students who are personally invited to become a member of the Beta Chi chapter. The goal of the Beta Chi chapter is to promote nursing globally. They achieve this annually by giving lectures and hosting service projects and research conferences on health related topics. Topics range from what it means to be a nurse to the conditions of diabetes.

The NSU College of Nursing and Allied Health partnered with Bachelor of Science in Radiologic Science baccalaureate degree program in 1994. This was an honor for the nursing college of NSU, because the Bachelor of Science in Radiologic Science baccalaureate degree program was one of only a few in the nation.

Alpha, the first chapter of Lambda Nu International in Louisiana, was chartered in 2001 at Northwestern. Lambda Nu is a national honor society with exclusive membership of the highest standards of radiologic excellence.

traditions upheld

Nursing is a major career in which one must care for another. A nurse must have compassion and know how to put others before themselves. Nurses take on the tasks of making sure a patient is of good health and meets the conditions recommended by the doctor. The ultimate goal of a nurse is to better the community and give back by making sure that the health of others is taken care of to the best of their ability. At the College of Nursing and Allied Health there are many opportunities to practice, show and achieve these goals.

Within the fourth largest nursing school in the nation, the College of Nursing and Allied Health of Northwestern State University, there are many traditions that students take part in. From volunteer work to raise awareness, to the final Pinning Night, the Northwestern College of Nursing and Allied Health students strive to excel with excellence.

When a College of Nursing and Allied Health student has reached the time of pinning the first thought is of success in finally achieving a goal. The night of pinning is a very special and remembered night for Nursing and Allied Health Students. This night completes their long journey jump-starting a new great adventure. It is tradition that the pinning ceremony be held the night before graduation. The NSU pin that students are presented with recognizes and reflects on their achievements in GPA, honors, grades, community and hospital work ethics. The NSU pin for the Nursing and Allied Health is considered as a symbol of excellence.

Annually students of the College of Nursing and Allied Health collect canned food items, clothing and every day necessities to be donated to organizations such as the McDade House, Feed the Hungry Foundation, Socks for the Homeless and the Haitian Health Program. The McDade House also known as "the home with a heart," gives support and comfort to families with family members being cared for in the intensive care unit. The McDade House provides families with a place to call home away from home during their stay in Shreveport. Also collected items benefit the Feed the Hungry Foundation, which contributes to malnourished children around the world. Feed the Hungry Foundation also takes action in national disasters to help get food and supplies to those in need.

At the College of Nursing and Allied Health students know that one of the best ways to stay healthy is to keep your feet warm and dry. Knowing this simple fact motivates students to collect socks to be donated to the Socks for the Homeless Foundation. There are several fundraisers in which the students raise money to support the Haitian Program, which is a health program that supports families in Haiti by providing homes and essentials for a better and healthier living environment.

The saying, "You can never judge someone until you have walked a mile in their shoes" holds true to the meaning of the "Walk a Mile in Her Shoes" awareness program. Every May the Nursing and Allied Heath College helps sponsor "Walk a Mile in Her Shoes" to raise awareness for sexual assault. The international "Walk a Mile in Her Shoes" is where men stand up to stop sexual violence against women and literally walk a mile in women's high heels.

COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY AND BUSINESS

the core of curriculum

The departments within the College of Science, Technology and Business impact all NSU students. Many classes in the core curriculum are taught in this college and many students choose to pursue one of many degree paths the college has to offer. As a result, the faculty in this college play a crucial role at NSU. The diversity of programs that constitute the college and the large number of students it impacts makes it a crucial component of the university.

The College of Science, Technology and Business is certainly multi-faceted, but each department within the college grew because of the expansion of technological resources. Professors can now instruct in one of many multimedia classrooms established over the last few years. Online classes are offered throughout the university and the selection continues to expand, which is aided by NSU being the largest provider of online classes in Louisiana. Although not present in every multimedia classroom, the college continues to improve the capabilities of video conferencing. The expansion of technological functions within the College of Science, Technology and Business remains a top priority that has been guided by the establishment of technology related objectives.

The faculty are encouraged to be involved with research for their own academic pursuits and as a way to keep course material fresh and to offer new courses. Students and faculty in the College of Science, Technology and Business are involved in scholastic pursuits beyond the university. Many faculty members act as consultants to regional industry and engage in research for the betterment of regional quality of life and economic development. Students and faculty also partake in service projects throughout the community to enhance their education and promote service.

-JACOB LABUTKA

The College of Science, Technology and Business plays a significant role on campus and functions well, because of the experience of its department heads. The department head who has been in the department the longest is Dr. Austin L. Temple, the dean of the College of Science, Technology and Business.

Before starting at NSU, he earned three degrees: he received his undergraduate from Centenary College in Shreveport, his master's from Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge, and his doctorate from George Peabody, which is now Vanderbilt University.

Temple began working at NSU in 1964 as a mathematics professor. He has continuously worked for the university since 1970 after briefly leaving the university to join the armed forces.

Temple says one of the most enjoyable actions he has taken since working at NSU was establishing a program for middle-school students. "We developed a curriculum for middle-school students using space-science as a vehicle to peak their interest," Temple said. The program was formerly located on the fourth floor of Kyser Hall in the 1980s and early 1990s and had between 3,000 to 4,000 students participating.

During his time at NSU, Temple has also been the producer of satellite TV shows that broadcast all over the country on PBS. The shows appealed to a young audience by playing for short durations to account for childrens' short attention spans.

These shows educated children on science concepts such as astronomy and evaporation. They won two national awards for consecutive years, at a public non-profit broadcasting film festival in New York.

Temple is also an active audience member in different engagements held on campus. He frequently attends sports games, particularly football, basketball and baseball. Temple also thinks very highly of the arts and enjoys the university symphony and chorale. He also attends productions held by the theatre department, as well as exhibits.

Health and Human Performance Department Head Dr. John Dollar has appreciated his time spent working with Temple. Dollar believes that Temple's greatest quality is his longevity and experience at NSU.

"He's been able to make important decisions and important observations as an administrator," Dollar said.

Dollar worked within Temple's department from 2003 until 2010, first as a teacher before becoming an administrator. He appreciated the mutual respect Temple gave to his faculty and administrators.

"He's loyal to NSU and for what the university stands for. He's loyal to his faculty; he doesn't throw anybody under the bus," Dollar said.

His experience as an academic dean and the respect he has for his peers makes Temple an important figure within the College of Science, Technology and Business and in the entire university.

NSU ROTC

a diverse group // a unified mission

The ROTC at NSU continues to be an active force on campus, as it has been for over half a century. The Senior Reserve Officer Training Corps was established by the U.S. Army and Northwestern State College (NSC) President H. Lee Prather in the fall of 1950. One year later, the program had 220 men and many of them became the program's first commissioned officers that same year.

The program successfully attracted students and grew as a department that continued to remain a part of NSC when its name changed to Northwestern State University (NSU). ROTC officially became recognized as the Northwestern State Demon Regiment (NDR) by President Randall J. Webb in 2007.

ROTC has produced 16 battalions since the program's inception. The first was the Commissioning Class of 1951 and the 16th was the Class of 2010. Many students who have graduated from the program have proceeded to earn high rankings within the U.S. Army. Since the first class in 1951, nearly 1,000 graduates became Second Lieutenants and eight earned the title of General Officer. The university has recognized the outstanding achievements of several graduates who enrolled in the U.S. Army and with the placement of five ROTC alumni on the NSU Long Purple Line.

ROTC continues to be a unique department on campus in which students are involved in many other activities. According to health and exercise science major, senior and completed cadet (meaning the student has finished all of her ROTC classes) Brittany Jeanice, cadets can be found in many different campus organizations. Many of these students are a part of organizations such as the Gamer's Guild, fraternities and sororities, and Lifted Voices. They are very diverse in how they are involved on campus, but they are all brought together by their involvement in ROTC.

They annually host and participate in competitive events called challenges. The NSU ROTC hosts the Demon Challenge that brings high school ROTC departments together to compete in various events. They also compete against other collegiate ROTC sections at Raider Challenge in Georgia.

The ROTC core curriculum at NSU is designed to educate its students about the history and practices of the U.S. Army. Every year students take classes that have a particular focus. These focuses have included the role of the Army, the role of an officer, small unit training and the transition to becoming an officer. Students develop from freshman educated on the rig structure, to seniors who are prepared for enlistment in the Army. Students like Jeanice will go into active duty in the U.S. Army after they graduate from NSU. Overall, involvement in ROTC is something that its students take great pride in. "It's something that's held to high regard and you're proud to be a part of," Jeanice said.

SCHOLARS' COLLEGE

a unique environment

"ἀρετή," or "excellence" in Ancient Greek, is the trademark slogan of the Louisiana Scholars' College. This phrase is seen on T-shirts and signs all throughout Morrison Hall, the home of the Scholars' College, and thoroughly expresses the sentiment behind the Louisiana Scholars' College. Students and professors of the Scholars' College strive to be the best they can be in all aspects of life. This ranges from academics to extracurricular activities.

Director:

T. Davina McClain

The Louisiana Scholars' College is the only designated honors college in Louisiana. Established in 1987, Scholars' has since remained true to its goals of providing students with a close-knit community and a supportive atmosphere for learning. The 2012 freshman class, at approximately 100 members, was the largest ever admitted. The foundation of the Scholars' curriculum focuses on liberal arts and the sciences to ensure that graduates have had the opportunity to reach their fullest potential.

From the Text and Traditions course that spans five semesters, to the three semester long writing-heavy Science Seminar, the students of Scholars' leave with much more than a list of dates and facts. They leave with improved public speaking skills, leadership qualities and a group of close friends and colleagues. The transformation most students undergo from freshman to senior year is extensive. Everything is questioned, sometimes by teachers playing the devil's advocate and sometimes by fellow students, but students are forced to defend their ideas in an academic setting.

Many of the core Scholars' courses are held in a seminar atmosphere. Early seminars are led by professors, but by sophomore year students are told to take the reins. Although many students may falter at first, student-led seminars are an important aspect in shaping a Scholars' graduate. Most classes are reading and writing intensive, giving students an opportunity to learn how to balance a heavy workload with student life.

Outside of the academic field, Scholars' is a college of community and traditions. From the annual formal dance, to the monthly food fairs, the Scholars' Forum Council is always trying to promote a healthy and fun environment for students and faculty members. Students are encouraged to participate in sports and recreational activities. Some have gone as far as clubs including NSU Dodgeball and Demon Fencing.

Dr. Lisa Wolffe

In 1987, the founding members of Louisiana Scholars' College were looking for someone to teach foreign languages for their new program. They contacted Dr. Lisa Wolffe, a graduate of the University of Texas, who was looking for work. Wolffe was hired as a translator for a French company, but a short time after her employment the company was bought out by an Italian company, essentially phasing out her job before it began. She immediately agreed to the Scholars' offer and has been a professor of foreign languages ever since.

Although she loves her field of study, one of the reasons she stayed at Scholars' was her ability to teach a variety of courses to her students. Where other universities would have pigeon-holed her into one subject, in Scholars' she has a chance to branch out to different fields.

"I taught languages classes and Text and Traditions, I teach Capstone courses. It's more than just teaching a language," Wolffe said.

Along with teaching a variety of courses, Wolffe had the chance to start the NSU Rowing Club a team that has gone on to win awards all over the country. Although she is still listed as the faculty advisor, she wishes there was more time for her to be involved in the sport.

"I think part of the reason we started it [NSU Rowing] is the small classes. Back then, I was still racing. I had been part of a club in Austin and they ended up giving us a free boat," Wolffe said. "We stored the boats under Russell Hall. We didn't have a trailer, so they [the rowers] had to carry the boat to Sibley Lake to practice."

Marissa Sonnier, a senior majoring in liberal arts at Scholars', has been a student of Wolffe for several semesters. "Her classes are challenging, especially the beginning language classes," Sonnier said. "But her directed studies are a lot of fun and introduce you to the language in a variety of mediums."

"She makes it a point to help you outside of class if you don't understand what's going on in class," Sonnier said. "She's an overall supportive and understanding professor. I always enjoy her classes."

Rachel Pair, a senior majoring in liberal arts, is currently working with Wolffe on her thesis. "If at any point I feel unsure of how to proceed or if I have any confusion, she always knows just what to do and gives excellent advice," Pair said.

Pair has been a student in Wolffe's French classes for four semesters in addition to having her as a thesis advisor. She was able to confide in Wolffe about anything from trouble with her thesis to confusion in other classes. She enjoys Wolffe's humor as well as her academic aid.

"Once a friend and I were in the hallway around finals and when I told him I was finished [with finals] Wolfe was walking by and jokingly said 'I believe the rules say that if someone is already done with finals, you get to kick them!' Luckily for me, my friend didn't take that seriously," Pair said.

It seems that Wolffe's students hold her in high regard, one of the marks of being a great teacher. Although these two students will be graduating soon, Wolffe has the chance to meet new students every year as a professor of foreign languages.

rediscovering history and living life to the fullest

More goes on within Morrison Hall than rigorous coursework and philosophical debate. The Scholars' College has created its own traditions that make it a truly unique department.

Students must certainly do battle in the classroom with papers and seminars, but they definitely know how to act out war. For the last several years, many Scholars students have participated in "Nerf Wars."

A place of learning transforms into an epic battlefield as tables become bunkers and desks become shields. Nerf pellets fly in all directions and the warrior-students dodge them hoping to avoid being shot. Vanquishing one's enemy and staying alive is the goal. Death is not an option, and if it happens the soldier must slowly walk to the end of the hall and back to be resurrected.

The Nerf War gives its players a chance to distract themselves from their rigorous work. "It's a stress relief from all the Scholars' work we have to do," Jebha Babu, junior and Scholars' scientific inquiry major, said.

In between Nerf battles and classes, students seek refuge in the center of Morrison Hall in the Scholars' lounge. For many years, students have gathered here to finish last minute assignments and vent about the stress of their lives. However, when too many students congregate here, some who need to study venture down the hall to a room known as the 'fish bowl."

"When discussion in the lounge gets too loud or intense I really appreciate being able to work in the fish bowl where it's quiet and there's a comfy couch," Brandi Vincent junior and Scholars' humanities and social thought major, said.

Although they now occupy their own building, Scholars' has not always had a set location In the 25 years that Scholars' has been a part of NSU, they have had to take residence in Russell Hall, Kyser Hall, the library and South Hall before settling in Morrison Hall

The building may be less than a decade old, but the college has kept reminders of their frequent moves. Before Scholars' faculty and staff could occupy Russell Hall it had to be thoroughly cleaned since it was used for storage. Among the mess, two statues were found: one that is called "Winged Angel" and one of Molière that has inspired several traditions.

According to the Scholars' College Secretary Janette Aaron, when Dr. Margaret Cochran was director she started the tradition of students placing their hand on Molière's head and reciting their degree title before graduating. Students sometimes leave pennies by Molière before a difficult test hoping the French playwright will give them a bit of luck.

These statues have become a symbol of the Scholars' College and a symbol of NSU history "The statues were used by the Art Department when it was a normal school to teach art students to draw," Aaron said

Several of the most important and meaningful traditions occur during graduation Scholars participates in the university graduation, but they also have their own separate graduation

When a student graduates, their thesis advisor places a medal around their neck They then receive certificates that are hand lettered in calligraphy by Aaron and impressed with the state seal and ribbon

"The certificate we give at graduation is made like the first certificate when it was a normal school," Aaron said Students also receive a diploma from the university but the certificate is the true symbol of their collegiate experience and is unique to Scholars' College

There is a time in the life of every student and faculty in Scholars' when they must eventually leave. For students and faculty, it means leaving behind years of wonderful memories and the home of great friends However, even when students and faculty leave they still remain a part of the college, always remembering the Scholars' phrase "olim doctus, semper doctus" ("once a scholar, always a scholar")

masters of their fields

Northwestern State University's Graduate School works hard to achieve and maintain its greatness through its state-of-the-art master's programs, its responsiveness in keeping up with student's needs and its use of online, as well as face-to-face, course work. The Graduate School encourages and nurtures its students by providing a community of like-minded individuals focused on scholarly pursuits. It is a capstone of intellect and apex of the best and brightest that NSU has to offer.

With master's programs covering a variety of up-and-coming fields, the Graduate Program prepares its students for the real world by hands on and in-the-field experiences. From teaching future educators, to educating our future nurses and counselors, the Graduate School at NSU has what it takes to send its students into the real world.

- RANDA LOPEZ

Dean:

Dr. Steve Horton

The Northwestern Graduate School offers an opportunity to start any type of career and also further ones studies. The application process is an online process that requires a GRE exam score. A student must apply with a minimum GPA of 2.5 as an undergraduate and a score of 282 on the GRE exam. Many students apply with confidence and the thought of achieving a higher goal in life.

Brittany Russ, a grad student studying for a master of science degree in health and human performances planned on going to grad school later in life after finding a job in her career but then was given the opportunity to become a graduate assistant in sports information. Russ received a call from the Director of Sports Information, Doug Ireland, offering her a job of either a graduate assistant or an intern. Russ is now currently head contact for soccer and softball, as well as the secondary contact for men's basketball and enjoys being a student of the NSU grad school.
"I'm in a large class where most of the students are around the same age, and most of us are GAs, so it makes it nice to know everyone else is working just as hard as you are all the time," said Russ. Being a GA is a lot of work, but there aren't very many programs that offer a quality education and the opportunity to gain valuable work experience at the same time."

Grad student Jimmie Walker, also in the sports administrative program, agrees that the NSU grad school program is one of the best programs offered for his career choice. "It's the best program offered with regard to my career interest. It's not a huge difference from undergrad. I enjoy learning, so I treat it the same," said Walker.

-CATHERINE WAGONER

second...or third time around: grad school

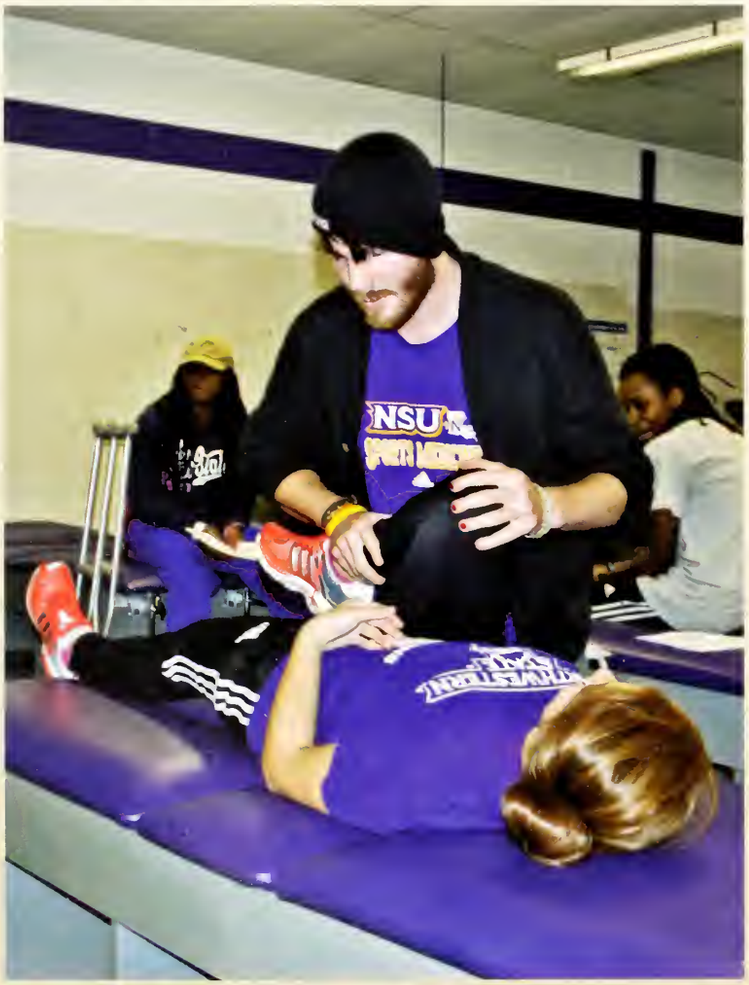

NSU offers experiences that can only be obtained through hands on interaction. Students who go through the graduate program at NSU benefit from real world scenarios. These interactions enhance their confidence in their area of study.

Danny Walen is doing his graduate studies at NSU in health and human performance. "NSU's graduate program has been a great experience. Getting the opportunity to work with teams allows me to see a variety of situations," said Walen. "The clinical experience and being in control of a team's medical care has been a great learning experience."

Dustin Morgan is also doing his graduate studies in health and human performance. "I like the experience of having my own teams and doing my own treatments. I am gaining skills that I would not have received otherwise," said Morgan.

TALENTS UNVEILED

faculty show off their skills

Every year Potpourri spotlights the amazing students of Northwestern, but this year the attention also turned to some of NSU's most talented faculty members. From lace-making to aviation, these professors do it all. Many faculty on this campus are talented, but these teachers broke stereotypes by being interested in hobbies that may be unexpected.

History professor Dr. Susan Dollar has demonstrated her tatting at folk festivals over the years and was even entered into the Louisiana Folklife Center's Hall of Master Folk Artists in 1999. Tatting, a form of lace making, is a skill that was passed down to her by her late aunt. She still uses her aunt's yellow shuttle, which her grandfather rode 18 miles on horseback to buy in the nearest town.

"It gives me peace of mind," Dollar said. "It's a quiet hobby and I'm a quiet person." She enjoys the sentimental side as well, as she regularly tats small gifts for friends and family. "The only problem is that sometimes it takes too long! The booties I was tatting for a friend's baby weren't done by the time he was born and I'm worried he'll outgrow them before I'm finished."

Dollar loves sharing her talent and has shared tatting with many interested people, from her young nephew to some colleagues in Fayetteville. She is always willing to pass tatting on, as it is a rare hobby that seems to be dying out with modernization.

Biology professor Dr. Milliard Mangrum, learned pottery recently when he was enrolled in one of NSU's electives with Professor Matthew DeFord. He went the same route as Dollar and now creates ceramic bowls and bottles as Christmas presents for his friends and family. Each bowl is special, the only one like it on the planet, which is something Mangrum thinks recipients appreciate about his gifts. "It's a way to relieve stress and even pass something on that's a part of you," Mangrum said. "It can be very frustrating if things don't turn out right, but it's also very fulfilling. I can go six or seven hours a stint."

Although Mangrum began by using standard pre-made clays, he now prefers to work with natural, local clays. With additives, the regional clays can be made pliable. This gives Mangrum's work a unique sense of locality that distinguishes it from pieces made by potters around the world.

Anna MacDonald, an associate at the Leesville campus library, has been a fan of painting since she was a child. From joining an art club to majoring in art history, she has tried to keep art in many facets of her life. She used her experience with art history to teach herself new ways to paint and see the world.

"I still paint and it's what I love to do," MacDonald said. "I love to see what students come up with and what they're working on and with what mediums." She has dabbled in art forms ranging from photography to finger paint, but she still tries to challenge herself with different styles and mediums.

Mathematics professor Dr. Ben Rushing found his passion in aviation. Although he was interested in model airplanes as a child, he didn't consider piloting until he and two friends bought a used airplane together. After that, he decided it was time to get his pilot's license. He now owns a yellow experimental Hiperbipe, a plane that isn't much bigger than a Mini-Cooper.

"It's illogical, expensive – I can't afford it. It's just a hole to pour money into," Rushing said. "But being up there is like freedom. Pure enjoyment. I'm not going to say it's peaceful, but my whole week gets better." Although aviation is an expensive hobby, Rushing points out that a few students on campus probably paid more for their pickup trucks than he did for his plane.

His love of aviation is the reason he has invited many people to fly with him. Some people are wary of being in the small plane at first, but he watches their expressions throughout the entire ride and most people have changed their mind about flying by the time they land.

These are only a few examples of the talented faculty at Northwestern. Many of these professors are ready and willing to share their hobbies with interested students.

the building that never sleeps

For the past 27 years, one of the biggest and most well-known traditions of the School of Creative and Performing Arts is the Christmas Gala production. All creative and performing arts students participate. This production focuses on each of the different departments of CAPA. This production is one of the most important and biggest productions that the students perform and create. Bringing in nearly 10,000 audience members in only four days, the Christmas Gala is held annually and is open to all of Natchitoches, therefore being one of the most important productions here on campus.

The Creative and Performing Arts north building was first built in 1983. It is named in honor of H.D. Dear and Alice E. Dear from Alexandra. Dear left monies to fund scholarships granted to creative and performing arts students.

Only three years later, theatre and music joined together, becoming the Department of Music and Theatre Arts. In 1989, CAPA, known as the Department of Creative and Performing Arts, changed to the School of Creative and Performing Arts.

Like many fine arts programs around the country, CAPA is open each evening until 11 p.m., allowing students to get together and practice freely. With college students not having many hours in the day between classes, jobs and a social life, this is very helpful when considering all the hours of practice needed to make a performance spectacular.

The main goal of CAPA is to provide the education and tools needed for students to be successful in the many different professions. Students of CAPA hope to one day be in an art studio, design company, on stage preforming symphonies, working back stage or even educating others on creative and performing arts material. No matter what students plan to do with their performing arts studies, professors here at NSU strive to educate them to the best of their ability so that they can follow their dreams.

art department

The Creative and Performing Arts building is home to some of the most talented people on campus. While the interests of these students are diverse, quite a few are drawn to the creative arts. The art department of Northwestern State University has undergone some changes in the past few years, in regards to budget cuts, but according to students, the program is still going strong.

While the CAPA family includes music and theatre majors as well, there is a special bond between the students of the art department.

Linda Ahlskog, a junior studying graphic art and design in CAPA, enjoys the "home-like atmosphere" of the art department. "The entire department, including the students, is so much fun and we do a lot of small get-togethers like Wiener Day and the Halloween party," Ahlskog said. For Ahlskog, an important part of CAPA is the casual atmosphere and the ease of making new friends. "You get to a point where it feels very comfortable," Ahlskog said.

Ethan McManus, a senior graphic arts major, shared the same sentiment for what he referred to as "a family of friends who live for the arts."

"My favorite events in CAPA would definitely have to be the student's senior art shows," McManus said. "It's a chance to see what other students like myself are best at."

"There is always something new and interesting going on and everyone seems to be at the top of their game with ambition to learn," McManus said.

Both McManus and Ahlskog are active members of the art fraternity, Kappa Pi, and are involved in fundraisers for the club.

Matthew DeFord, the coordinator of art, teaches all levels of sculpture and ceramics. He has been a professor at Northwestern since the spring semester of 2005 and still enjoys the diversity the students of the art department bring to his classes.

One of the biggest problems DeFord sees in the classes he teaches is when a student who has great talent does not utilize it. "The difficulty comes when a student with potential fails to see or act upon it and chooses mediocrity instead," DeFord said.

"Teaching art is teaching people to think visually, to tap into the subconscious and confront themselves. It's wonderful when a student finds the power source that drives them and they learn to translate it visually to their satisfaction."

theater and dance

The Theatre and Dance Department has a bachelor of science degree in theatre with concentrations in performance and directing, musical theatre, stage design and technology and dance.

The department's work is never done for both students and faculty. There are four to six productions put on throughout each semester, along with two to three in the summer.

The Theatre and Dance Department is a member of the Center of Excellence in the state of Louisiana for Creating and Performing Arts, along with being a member of the American College Theatre Festival and accredited by the National Association of Schools of Theatre.

Traditions in the department help keep the students together and encourage bonding. At the beginning of each semester, the theatre and dance department have gatherings as well as a senior dance, opening night receptions, pool parties and a gathering before every production.

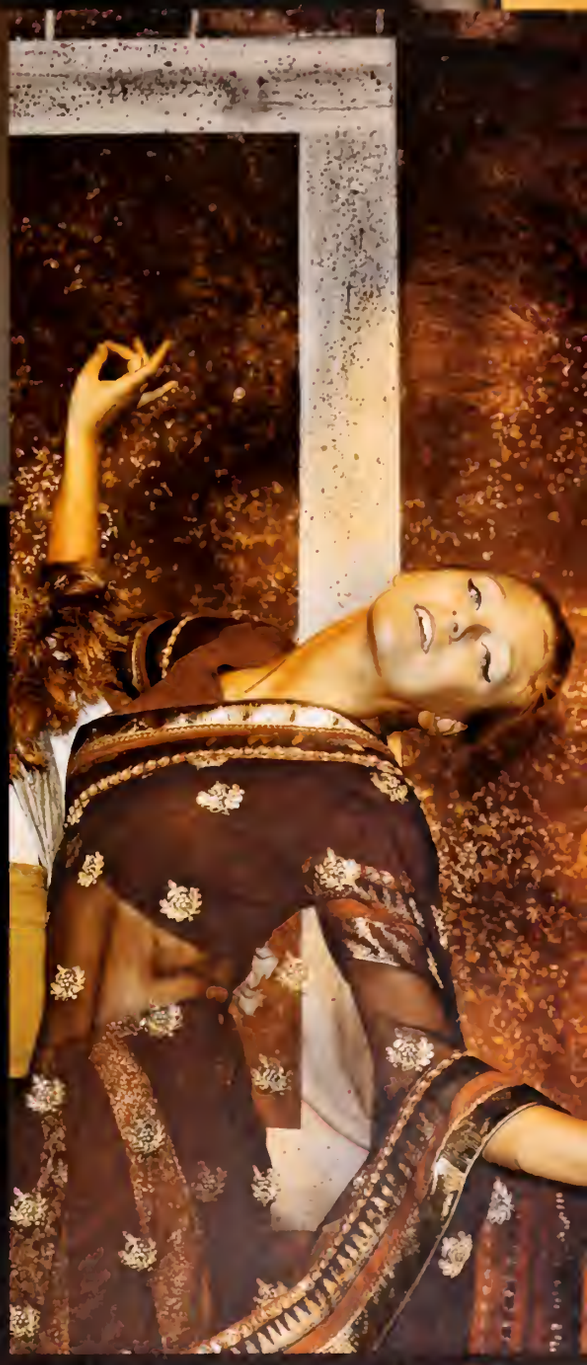

"Traditions let the students know they are a part of something bigger than themselves," Department Head Scott Burrell said. Burrell is also the artistic director and a professor of theatre. He has been a member of faculty for 14 years.

One challenge Burrell and the rest of the staff face is staying on top of what goes on in the world. Keeping up with the world helps Burrell better prepare students for their future. Recruiting more students is another challenge, but watching students succeed professionally is the positive side of it all.

"I live through my students," Burrell said. "They take a little bit of what we give them."

Every year, the Theatre and Dance Department puts together an educational production, for younger audiences as well as a classical production. There is also a risky production. It is to help the students accept the challenges life may bring and also experience failure sometimes.

"Theatre is designed to entertain but also to teach," Burrell said.

Many of the students in the department go on to work in professional theatres as teachers and in graduate programs. Many theatre and dance graduate students are also working professionally with musical theatre, Broadway shows, on cruise ships, at Disney World and at other theme parks.

Over the years, Burrell has seen many changes within the department mostly because of technology. There is always a new discovery with the technology in the department.

In the future, space and technology are some of the improvements the Theatre and Dance Department plans to work on.

Burrell he has one piece of advice for all students.

"Just keep challenging us," Burrell said.

music

The music department of Creative and Performing Arts may not be the most outspoken group at Northwestern, but they are some of the most involved students. Their involvement on campus ranges from the Spirit of Northwestern to the Christmas Gala.

Aaron McConnell, a junior majoring in pre-physical therapy, has been involved in the men's choir since his freshman year at Northwestern and sees singing as one of the best opportunities for him.

"There are so many opportunities for music majors and non-majors to be in vocal performing ensembles," McConnell said. "Having sung in University Singers, Men's Chorus, Concert Choir and Chamber Choir, I can attest to the fact that we have a wonderful music program at Northwestern."

While McConnell admits that the scholarship money was a bonus, he is grateful for the exposure to new music and genres that being involved in the music department has awarded him. "Being in choir has given me the awesome opportunity to work and perform with many other talented musicians," McConnell said.

Victoria Kwentua, a junior majoring in premed, also appreciates the diversity of the music department. "The fact that a premed major can perform next to a culinary arts major and a theatre major is such an awesome feeling," Kwentua said

Kwentua is involved in Northwestern Lyric choir, a women's choir, and enjoys the familiarity and bonding fostered in the music department atmosphere. "Everyone is basically family. We support one another through auditions. We help each other memorize and play pieces of music," Kwentua said. "So when I forget the words to a song, someone else helps me remember by singing the verse louder."

Although Gala is known to be a hectic time of the year for CAPA students, Kwentua enjoys the camaraderie and tomfoolery that begins when the curtain closes after a Gala performance.

Paul Christopher, an associate professor in the music department, enjoys the interesting and stimulating nature of the students in the music department.

"The rewards and disappointments in teaching music are no different than in other disciplines," Christopher said. "It's always a pleasure to see a student develop his abilities and learn how to express themselves through such an elevated art form."

According to Christopher, one of the drawbacks he sees is when a student does not take advantage of his or her talents and disregards a professor's guidance and instruction.

"We are also blessed at CAPA with excellent support from our Department Chair, William Brent, and our Music Coordinator, Dr. Burt Allen," Christopher said. "Despite these tough economic times, they have been able to maintain scholarships and funds for travel. Without them we wouldn't have such a strong, growing program."

evolving through time

In 1923, two students at Northwestern State University entered a contest to help decide the school's mascot. Out of a range of ideas from Prather's Ground Hogs to Bloodhounds, Aileen Ritter and Truett Scarborough's suggestions of Demons won the grand prize of $10.

Over 60 years later, the Demon mascot of NSU was finally named: "Victory," or "Vic" for short. Since 1923, Vic the Demon has gone through many physical changes. He first appeared on a 1924 edition of Potpourri as a shapeless creature with claws, horns and a tail.

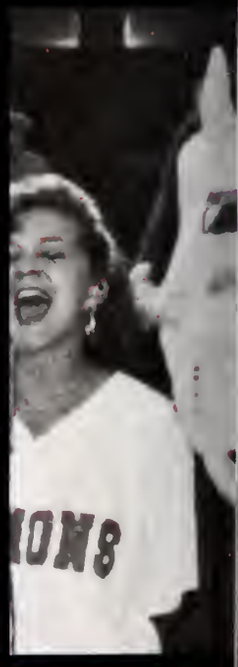

Over the years his demonic features have morphed into the small-horned and pointy-eared Vic of the 2012-2013 school year

Although Vic is normally seen cheering on crowds and generating school spirit, in 1993 there was a mascot showdown between Vic the Demon and Chief Brave Spirit that can still be seen on sports channels today. The fight was so notori[illegible] that if one was to search "Vic the Demon on Wikipedia, it would be one of the few pieces of information on the page.

Despite, or perhaps because of, Vic's colorful history and his drastic change in appearance, many supporters of Northwestern State University can find something that they like about the mascot

growing stronger every year

The Demon football team has many traditions that they celebrate each year to grow stronger as a team and achieve their annual goals.

The quote, "Those Who Stay Will be Champions," is what the Demon football players see every day to remind them of their personal and team goals.

"Every year we elect 'Demon Deacons' that represent our team to lead the team in the right direction," Coach Bradley Dale Peveto said. According to Coach Peveto, the players also wear chain links to remind each other that they are a strong link and a part of a unified team.

"One goal that the coaches and staff have made for the team this year is to 'finish,' Senior Nicolas Russo said. "Whether it is at practice, weight training or games, we are all working on this concept to make our team better." According to Russo, one personal tradition that he has is always wearing armbands and listening to slow music before games.

According to Peveto annual community service in the NSU football team takes part include donating blood to Life Share Blood Centers, Chris Waddel Day, visiting local churches and the Joe Delany Bowl.

During Chris Waddel Day players visit schools and lend a helping hand to teachers and faculty to remember a former player who passed away. The Joe Delany Bowl is a spring game that shows the Demon's remembrance of Joe Delany, and his accomplishments as a professional football player as well as his heroic qualities.

The most widely known tradition that Demon football participates in is the battle for Chief Caddo. Chief Caddo is the largest trophy in college football and the game between NSU and rival Stephen F. Austin, determines the trophy holder for the year.

"I haven't seen Chief Caddo since freshmen year, having him here is long overdue," said Demon Deacon Cortez Paige. The NSU football team won Chief Caddo in 2009, and it has not made its way back to NSU's campus yet.

"Chief Caddo is one of the greatest traditions in college football," Peveto said. It is a huge deal to have Chief Caddo at our school and to see the sight of our team yelling, 'We got the Chief, 'We got the Chief' is the greatest honor.'

According to the players and coaches, the team plans to continue their annual traditions and have different goals to reach for each year. "Our team is very close, disciplined, hard-working and take their academics very seriously," Peveto said. "This is the main reason that we take part in many community and service events in the Natchitoches community."

the game of traditions and superstitions

The Demon Basketball team values their team traditions, while also following specific game routines.

"Before we leave the locker room on game day, we all form a circle holding hands and Coach Mike prays. We also form a huddle and say a chant before we run out on the court," said senior Shamir Davis.

"We always get really loud in the tunnel before we head out on the court to get us pumped up," said player James Howard.

According to Davis, the team also has superstitions that include never leaving the court on a missed basket during the game day warm up. "No matter who is the last shooter on the court, he must make the shot because we never leave on a miss," said Davis.

Davis has been inspired to play the game of basketball. "I lost two of my middle school and high school starting teammates, Terence Winn and Jarod Farmer. Besides for my family, I play for them," said Davis.

Davis recently changed his basketball number to three in remembrance of his past teammate Farmer. "After every shot I make, I put up the letter "L" for the lost loved ones that inspired me play the game of basketball," said Davis.

Davis's personal routines before games include prayer, relaxing, dancing, and joking with his teammates. "I don't get too focused because then you tend to analyze everything and want it to be perfect. Basketball is never perfect," said Davis.

According to Howard, he gets to games three to four hours before game time to shoot and get prepared for the game. "As long as we play together and play hard, we are going to have an outstanding year," said Howard.

"This season will be different from the last because we have a lot of new pieces that have much more versatility on offense and defense," said Davis. According to Davis the team is aiming for a big year, and ranked number three in preseason rankings.

"Our couches expect great things from us. We have to respond positively and get the job done," said Davis.

LADY DEMON BASKETBALL

new coaching staff brings a new attitude to the team

The Lady Demon basketball team was excited this year about the new coaching staff and was eager to take their game to the next level.

Brooke Stoehr and Scott Stoehr were chosen to serve as the new Lady Demon head coaches. They became the program's first co-head coaching duo in the 38-year history.

"We are going to win more games this year than last year because we are more determined and hungry to win," said senior player Jasmine Upchurch.

According to sophomore player Jasmine Bradley, she is excited and ready for this season because she feels that the season is already different from previous season. "I believe this team will continue to change as we start to learn from the new coaching staff, and they get to know us as well," said Bradley.

Some things have changed amongst the team, but some of the traditions still stay the same. "It is team tradition for us as a whole to pray before and after every game," said Bradley. "It's also a routine for us to put our Fork 'Em signs up with our fingers and say family or together after each time out."

Bradley also says a personal prayer for her team and the opposing team to be free from injury before each game. Some players such as Upchurch share superstitions during the game. "The only thing I do that is a routine is I never shoot at halftime. I just rebound for everyone else," said Upchurch.

Both of these players have been playing basketball their whole lives. "I play basketball for my mom because she has been there for me regardless of the situation," said Bradley. According to Upchurch, she plays for her parents, and credits them for being the reason she started playing basketball.

change for the best

The Demon Baseball team is looking forward to this spring season because of the team energy and new techniques that new head coach, Lane Burroughs, and their newly recruited players are adding to the team.

"This season is going to be different due to the determination of the squad. We have the best drive and a greatest desire I have seen in the four years that I have played college baseball," red shirt junior Cameron Brewer said.

Senior player Todd Wallace also believes that this season is going to be far better than last year. "Last year our team vibe was nothing compared to this year. We are going to be tough, strong and untied this year," said Wallace.

According to the team, each and every player has their own strategy and routine before every game to get them mentally prepared. "I personally drink a Monster before every game, and I also pray with player Will Watson before just to have some comfort in my mind that it is just a baseball game," said Wallace.

Athletes tend to share certain superstitions to mentally and physically prepare them for the game or match. According to Brewer, all baseball players have certain superstitions before the games to prepare them to do their best at the game. These superstitions include everything from handshakes before the game, spitting on the dirt, writing a symbol or number in the dirt at a certain position, stepping over the chalk line or a simple prayer before the game starts.

"I personally like to get on the field early after getting a good stretch from one of the trainers and hit fungo to my infielders to get a good sweat going before the pregame routines," said Brewer.

Both of these players have a specific reason that they continue to play the game of baseball today. "I play for my dad who passed away last June from cancer and I play as if he's watching over me every game," said Brewer. According to Wallace his parents have been his support and keep pushing him to the next level of baseball.

According to senior player Will Watson, he loves the new coaching staff and they are coming together as a team. "Our new coaches have really instilled a family atmosphere within us so we want to play as hard as we can for the person next to us," Watson said. "We are excited and ready to start the season to bring a championship back to NSU."

STATION WAGONS TO CHARTER BUSES

softball continually upgrading

The Lady Demon softball team was founded at Northwestern State University in 1979, and since then traditions have been established and improvements made.

Lynne Roberts played on the first NSU softball team in 1979. "We had around 15 girls on the team, one uniform and no softball complex on campus. We practiced on fields around the City of Natchitoches, and played games at Highland Park," said Roberts. Currently the NSU softball players use a charter bus for their transportation to games and have a fully paid coaching staff. "We all traveled on station wagons to get to games. I had three different coaches through my career at NSU who were not full paid coaches, but simply graduate assistants that offered to help while also teaching and helping other sports," said Roberts.

"The game has changed since I played, there is more talent and softball is a faster paced game," said Roberts. Most softball players originally played slow-pitch in high school, and had to adjust to fast-pitch for the first time at NSU. According to senior Jordan Palmer, playing softball at NSU now takes the majority of your time and commitment. "Women's sports at NSU were different then because many softball players played other sports than just softball. There were softball players that also played volleyball and basketball for NSU to help make a team for each sport," said Roberts.

Some things remain the same, scholarships were still given to softball players in 1979, but usually only partial scholarships were awarded. "Our uniforms then were still the traditional school colors. We wore purple pants, and accented orange just like the NSU softball team currently does," said Roberts.

Tradition continues to be handed down by the Lady Demons, and senior Brooke Boening plans to create more traditions before she graduates. "Traditions that have always been part of the softball program are the Fork Em' sign after the pledge of allegiance, and team dinners before and after games. Both of these things mean a lot to our team, and have been a tradition since I have been at NSU," said Boening.

Boening has been part of the Lady Demon softball team for the last four years, and many improvements have been made since her freshmen year. "I think the upgrades to the softball department have brought more enthusiasm and a better atmosphere to our team," said Boening. Advancements since Boeing's freshmen year are a renovated locker room, new stadium, more apparel and technological progress in the academic center.

This upcoming year holds high expectations for this young team. "My goal to make this season different from the rest is to win conference, establish a name for ourselves and gain respect throughout the athletic community," said senior player Jordan Palmer.

LADY DEMON TENNIS

one match at a time

The Lady Demon tennis team plans to have more confidence in themselves, and to keep doing the same things they have done in previous seasons to accomplish their goal of winning the conference championship.

"Before a match we always do our traditional warm up that includes stretching, serving and hitting," said sophomore Amy Williams.

Some players, like senior Andrea Nedorostová, plan to make this final season their best. "I am a person on the team who always wakes up earlier than others to do additional stretching and warming up on my own," said Nedorostová. "I make sure I stretch every muscle that I can think of."
According to Nedorostová, stretching this much helps her focus and calm down before a match. "I couldn't go into a match without dong this, because it is a ritual that I have been doing my whole life since I've started playing tennis," said Nedorostová.

According to Williams, she always has to drink a bottle of Gatorade before every match. "We do not have any specific superstitions as a team, but we do say a cheer before every match," said Williams.

Both of these players believe that this season is going to be different from the previous season. "This season is going to be different because I am no longer a freshmen, and will have more experience and confidence on the court," said Williams.

Nedorostová has specific goals for herself this season as her college career ends at NSU. "This is going to be a very special season for me because I am a senior. I go into every season with a goal to stay unbeaten as an individual and as a team," said Nedorostová. "Saying goodbye to college tennis will be very emotional for me because I love representing NSU."

Some players, such as freshmen Natalya Krutova, from Ukraine, think that playing in America is a new experience. "I think the style of tennis is a little different because in Europe we usually play on clay courts," said Krutova.

According to sophomore Tatiana Larina, some players do not get the opportunity to play college tennis in their own country, such as Russia. "I want to be a professional tennis player and try to achieve my personal sport goals while I am here in the United States," said Larina.

MAKING A NAME

early mornings, late nights, paying off

Jogging along the trail by Sibley Lake, you look out into the water and see a long boat filled with college students and wonder who they could be. That group of students is NSU's Crew team, a team that is making a name for itself on the campus of NSU.

The team took four boats to the national competition last spring. Two of their boats placed: guys novice lightweight four boat finished sixth and the girls varsity four boat finished 17th place.

"My greatest memory from crew is from my first year on the team," said junior Jason Templet, a health and exercise science major. Templet said, "My boat placed second at regionals by less than one second. We were going to catch them too if we had 50 more meters. It was really intense and such a rush of adrenaline and excitement."

"Traveling is one of the most fun things we get to do as a team. Crew has become my family away from home," said Templet. According to Templet, he has made many lifelong friends because of crew and memories that he will never forget.

"The crew team has been at NSU since October 1987. One tradition we keep is if there is a birthday on the team, that person gets thrown into the lake, regardless of the temperature," said Kaylee Wagner, a junior majoring in psychology. "If you win a race, your boat gets to throw their coxswain (the angry little bitter person that sits in the front and yells throughout the race and steers) into the lake where you receive your medal," said Wagner.

Micah Malnar, a junior accounting and business administration major, has been a member of the crew team for two years. Malnar said, "One tradition that we hold every year is spring training. This is a two week program that pushes us to the max and shows us what we are capable of. Usually we have schools that travel down to do spring training with us on Cane River."

NSU has a crew team filled with dedicated men and women. From practicing before the dawn and into the dusk, the NSU crew teams' hard work is paying off.

VOLLEYBALL

traditions leading to success

The Lady Demon volleyball team has bonded together this season through the building of traditions.

"This year, we all ate a pre-game meal together and hung out in the locker room," sophomore starter Mackenzie Neely said. "Our 'team-time' is listening to music, talking and bonding before the game." According to Neely, her personal traditions are now a result of her "Gran" (grandma) who passed away from cancer this past spring.

"I always read over a couple saved messages from my Gran before the game. She was my biggest supporter when I played," Neely said. Neely also listens to music and imagines how she wants to perform on the court.

According to junior player Jessica Guttierrez, some game day traditions include spinning the wheelbarrow wheel in the locker room, flicking the lights and praying as a team. "Before every season, we hold the four on four, sand volleyball tournament called the Demon Digfest," Guttierrez said. "This is a fundraiser to raise money for our team."

According to both Guttierrez and Neely, this year is different because of the more experienced players now on the court and they have become closer as a team. "We now know how each other will play, so it's always fun to challenge your teammates to make them better," said Guttierrez.

"Last year the majority of our team and starters were freshmen, and now the majority of the team is sophomores. It's only one year, but it makes all the difference in the world when it comes to our experience on the court and dealing with difficult situations come match time," Neely said.

According to Guttierrez, the coaching plan for this year was to focus on one game at a time and get into the conference tournament with the intention of winning the conference tournament. "Our coaches teach us very interesting techniques that seem crazy at first, but those techniques are truly what make our team unique. The coaches' main phrase is 'to be comfortable being uncomfortable'," said Guttierrez.

According to Neely and Guttierrez, volleyball at Northwestern State University is a great program and with the coaches' passion and dedication for the team, they expect to do great things. Last year the volleyball team was ranked the eighth seed in the conference tournament. "This year we are hoping for a top half seed and to make it way past the first round," Neely said.

track team keeps their eyes on the prize

"Last year we did not perform to our capabilities. Our sprinters, relays and javelin throwers were good, but we were young," track head coach of 31 years, Leon Johnson said.

"This year there are sophomores and juniors that we are seeing vast improvement with maturity," Johnson said. "They set a goal to win conference indoor and outdoor this year. I think we have a good shot at being conference champions in both."

According to Johnson, running at the home meet is a tradition as well as a team favorite. "We adjust the training schedule each year, but we definitely love to compete against our conference schools in Louisiana," said Johnson.

"One of the most important traditions from NSU track is Johnson's speeches before indoor and outdoor track conference championships," senior music education major Nathanial McReynolds said. "Every day I gave it my all, I may not have received the results I wanted, but I will never regret one day of it," McReynolds said.

According to McReynolds, the track program has not really changed since he has been a member of the team. "You just need to show up with your spikes and be ready to run," said McReynolds.

"I've had four different coaches during my four years of competing at Northwestern," senior biology-pre med major Lawana Perkins said. "It was difficult making transitions for different coaches because I had to get used to different styles of training. However, I made improvements each year in my different events, from cross country to speed training."

According to Perkins, one of her best memories was when the women's 4x400 meter relay team broke the school record and placed second at the outdoor conference meet.

"My junior year we placed second in conference when it was held here, and I think that was the first time in the history of NSU that the girls team had ever done that," Perkins said.

"My coaches influenced me by their dedication to me and my teammates. They were always focused on the end results, even when we lost sight of it."

CROSS COUNTRY

runners take strides for success

The Cross Country team at Northwestern State University utilizes traditions and personal routines to ensure that they maintain success.

According to runner Aly Coughlin, the preparation for their performance starts far before the actual running event with team dinners of pasta and carbohydrates. "Before cross country meets we always do strides at the starting line and meet Coach Adam out there for a pep talk," said Coughlin.

"We treat workouts just as we would actual race days. Every race my goal is TO give it my all and not hold anything back," said runner Ali Fontenot.

"We are trying to start traditions. Since it's such a young team we are trying to have more of a brotherhood. We are getting to know each other, we know when they are sick, when they are down, and know what brings them up," said runner John Broughton.

These runners have been running since they were younger, and are glad they chose to continue running in college. "I've run cross country since fifth grade and still to this day I don't know what made me want to go out for the cross country team, but I'm glad I did," said Fontenot.

According to Coughlin, her family has had a big impact for the reason that she runs. "My dad is a big reason that I run cross country and track because he's always been a runner and knows what it is like. He's pushed me to work hard for as long as I can remember," said Coughlin.

NSU Cross Country runners share personal routines that help them feel prepared and motivated for the race. "I always wear a certain headband at meets during the season. I also try and eat pasta the night before a meet. I have done this ever since I started running in seventh grade," said Coughlin.

According to Fontenot she can eat mostly whatever she wants on game day, but still tries to keep it healthy. "Before meets I always make sure my music is up to date because that motivates me to get in the race mode," said Fontenot.

According to the men runners, they have specific personal routines that they do before meets. "As a team we pray together before the race. Individually, I always run a little ways past the start, squat down facing everyone and pray, thanking God, my family, and everyone that has given me the chance to do what I am doing," said runner Alex Hebert.

"I listen to music before my races. "Tears Don't Fall" by Bullet for my Valentine is my favorite song to listen to. We are establishing whole new traditions, ways of thinking, and brotherhood and so far it is working. We will be seeing the effects not this year, but in the years to come," said Broughton.

These runners think that this season is different from the previous cross country seasons. "This track season is different from last year because we have some really talented runners that came in last year, and we also plan to score more points in the distance events," said Coughlin. Fontenot also plans to have a great track season because the team is in better shape in hopes to place higher in conference.

new soccer coaches gear up

The Lady Demon soccer team is looking for a new start this year with a new coaching staff as well as improvements to their department.

Melodie Johnson is excited about this season, and all the changes that the new head coach, George Van Linder, has made to the team. "Coach Linder has changed our formation and changed player's positions. This has brought excitement and a new mentality to our team," said Johnson.

The soccer players received new apparel by switching from Nike to Adidas brand. They have been equipped with new cleats, workout gear and uniforms. The locker room was renovated with new tile and furniture since Johnson has been at NSU. Last year, the university also made improvements to the complex by placing banners on the outside of the stands with players' pictures and logos.

"Our traditions continue to be handed down from team to team. We do not have that many, but the ones that we do have mean a lot to our team," said Johnson. Before a game the team circles around the middle of the field and prepares for the upcoming game. "We do this before every game, and it is a routine that helps us get mentally and physically ready," said Johnson.

The seniors on the soccer team hold traditions as well. "Before the first game of the season seniors designate all returners a new player to be their 'big sister' and we go buy them silly things to ease their mind before their first college game," said Johnson. This has been a tradition since Johnson can remember, and brings the team closer before the start of the season. Seniors also get the privilege of sitting in the back of the bus while younger players fill the front when traveling to games.

The NSU soccer team likes to remember previous players by hosting an alumni game every year. This shows the Natchitoches community how many players have come through the soccer program. Former teammate Carrie Crowell takes part in the alumni game tradition. "Alumni weekend is something that everyone looks forward to every year. It is a chance for previous players to reconnect with their former teammates," said Crowell. "Before the game, the alumni team is always confident that we will win, until we start to run."

According to Johnson, the number one goal of the soccer team is to win conference and make it to the NCAA tournament. "I think we can get to the tournament with the new strategies and the talented players that the new coach has added to the team."

CHEERLEADING
demon spirit

"The best part about cheering is having the chance to represent Northwestern State University," second year cheerleader Brittney Dupuis, sophomore early childhood education major, said. Cheerleading is a busy sport for the spirited guys and girls. By the time football season is finished, basketball season is quickly approaching and before they know it tryouts are starting.

Doing stunts on the field and tumbling across the court, the NSU Demon cheerleaders are never done. They take their performances to the NSU Elementary Lab and also had a chance to visit West Ouachita High School in West Monroe this past fall.

"I like seeing the joy on the children's faces," Dupuis said. "It's heart warming."

Just like with any other sport, cheering comes with challenges. Coming up with new routines can be difficult. For freshman business major Lakyn Ward, practice can be scary because of new stunts, pyramids and tumbling, but, once on the field, the fear disappears. Although the stunts, pyramids and tumbling gave the first year cheerleader a rush, Ward enjoys the pep rallies, pre-games shows and the Demon spell out.

"Cheering in front of the audience is when I get pumped up," Ward said.
Practices filled with stunting, tumbling, pyramids, baskets and routines are held three days of the week for at least three hours. There really is no break for the cheerleaders, because when practices are finished for the week there's a game too. Besides cheering, traditions are what help keep the squad together. They huddle up like a family after every practice. They mingle with alumni, students and Demon fans during tailgating. They also host Thanksgiving and Christmas parties within the squad.

"I enjoy cheering with people who share the same passion I do," second year cheerleader Kierra Cunningham, sophomore veterinary medicine major, said.
For the cheerleaders, it's more than just cheering. It's a family. They enjoy working with each other to bring spirit to NSU events.

"The squad has taught me how to work with others to accomplish a goal," said Dupuis.

POM PON LINE

cheer and dance

The 23 ladies of the 2012 NSU pomline are the ones to really grab the audience's attention with the style of both cheer and dance in their performances. The pomline's mixture of both dance and cheer allow them to perform at football games, basketball games, selected away games, senior and junior days and march in parades such as the annual homecoming parade, as well as this year's 86th City of Lights Christmas parade in Natchitoches. Pomline girls are dedicated athletes who put their whole heart into their squad and overall performances. From selling raffle tickets to practicing consecutively in the gym, these ladies never stop. Pomline dancer Megan Smith states, "I really enjoyed my time on pomline, it was a great experience for me and it really helped me develop time management skills and also gave me the chance to make lifelong friends."

Pomline dancers usually practice two hours straight, but when a performance is coming up, they increase these practice times to twice a day, sometimes starting at 6:30 in the morning. A great deal of work goes in to choreographing these dances, work such as learning the dance, determining if the dance is of good performance to the audience and what should be added or taken away, then relearning to perfection.

DEMON DAZZLERS

dancing with dazzlers

Some may think dancing is just moving your body to the rhythm of the beat. For Captain Rachael McGee, senior biology major, and Co-Captain Robin Wilder, junior early childhood education major, it's more than just moving your body.

With a growing team and limited uniforms, weaving in and out of a band of at least 300 members, practicing for perfection and leading 14 Dazzlers is not an easy job for McGee and Wilder. Practices for the Dazzlers can be difficult, especially formations with the band. They begin practices early to get their formation and movements.

McGee and Wilder find it challenging to get new members of the Dazzlers to get on one page since they all have their own style of dancing. It's also a challenge to lead a group of girls who are all the same age.

It gets easier as the year go on, and for the basketball season the Dazzlers really get to showcase their talent. Then, they are on a hard surface, no grass and dancing in the rain.

Though it gets hard at time, the bond the Dazzlers share is much stronger than their hardship. Seeing each other six days out of a week, helps create that strong bond and makes it easier for freshmen because they are new to campus.

"The Dazzlers are like a sisterhood to me," McGee said. "We talk, laugh and cut up when were not supposed to, but we have fun."

"We have a family that we can call up at any time," Wilder said.

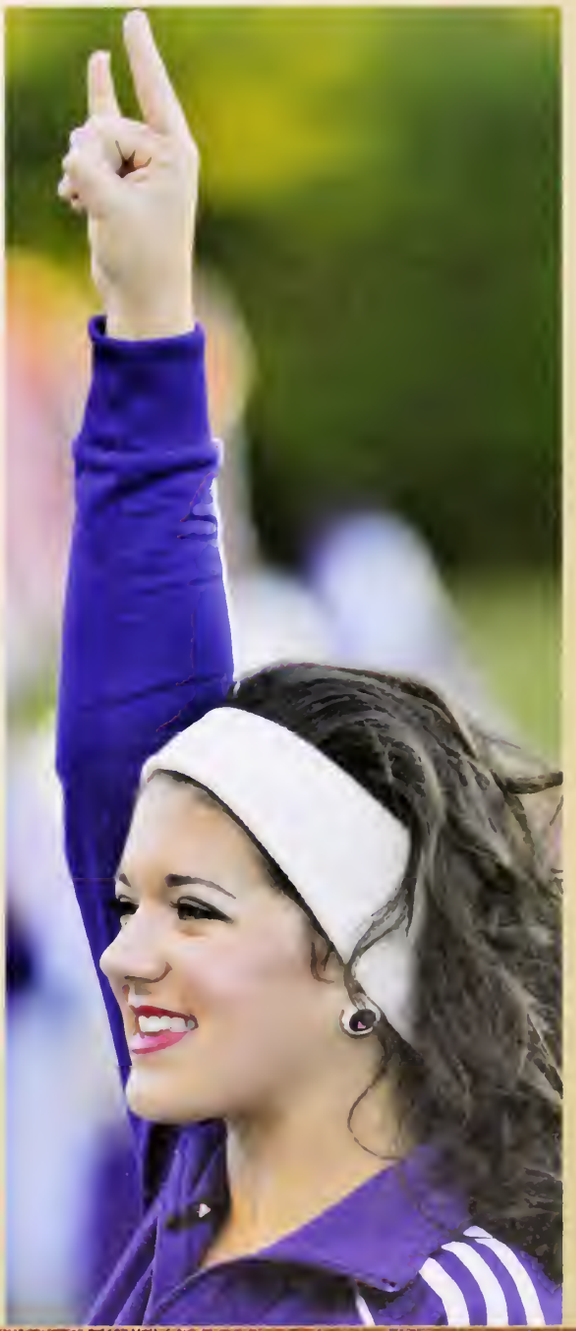

Dancing in the Christmas Gala and Lady of the Bracelet, marching in the parade and performing with the Spirit of Northwestern band, competing in national competitions, and putting together dance campus for younger dancers are traditions of the Dazzlers. Within the team, they share traditions like prayer before each performance, Dazzler banquet and a box that holds funny moments of the Dazzlers written on pieces of paper.

The Gala and performing with band are the most challenging things because they don't want to disappointment supporters. The Dazzlers have won numerous awards and trophies from BDA dance campus. They have also won national champion runner up.

SPIRIT OF NORTHWESTERN

101 years of excellence

The presence of the Spirit of Northwestern, or "SON" can be found in all aspects of the campus. The SON plays the fight song, as well as the Alma Mater, two of the most important songs that convey the "spirit" of NSU.

"I think most people would agree that our band conveys that spirit every time we step onto the field- whether it be to perform pre-game or one of our many unique halftime shows- or in the stands when we're supporting the football team and uniting the stadium in chants and cheers," senior travel/tourism major Lindsay Alleman said.

One of the bands' highest accomplishments was being in the top three finalists for the The Sudler Trophy. This award is the highest collegiate award for marching bands and is only awarded every two years.

LeAndre Benton, co-drum major for the SON and a junior music education major said, "This is an award that is bestowed annually to a college or university marching band that has demonstrated high musical standards and innovative marching routines and ideas, and which has made important contributions to the advancement of the performance standards of college marching bands over a period of years."

Traditions held by the Spirit of Northwestern include: the kick step, which is used only during pregame events; playing the fight song while facing the stadium after every rehearsal and after a football game win; marching back to CAPA with their hats on backwards and the guards carrying their flags upside down. The "N" formation during the pre-game is another a tradition of the Spirit of Northwestern.

"It's an accomplishment putting on a fabulous performance, while busy with school, work and our personal lives. Being in band is a full time job. We never stop working," Brandice Dykes, a senior majoring in health and exercise science, said.

According to Benton, there are many traditions that the Spirit of Northwestern strives to keep alive, and among these are the "Game Day Stretch," spelling out "DEMONS" during half-time performances, verbally saying, "O" as Bill Brent enters rehearsals, sousaphones growling in their instruments as they march on the field and saying, "Hey up--GYST!" before the fight song at the end of rehearsals.

Many of the band members, including Benton, Alleman and Dykes agree that performing at Tiger Stadium was an all time favorite moment. "I had so much adrenaline and felt like a rock star," said Dykes. "That halftime performance was one hell of a show."

"My favorite memory would have to be performing at LSU in Tiger Stadium," Alleman said. "LSU and their band receive more recognition because they are such a big school, but that night we showed all those LSU fans and the country who the Spirit of Northwestern is and that we mean business."

The marching band performs in parades, football games, concerts, musicals and pep rallies, making the band a vital part of NSU and the community. "Music has a unique way of bringing people together," said Benton.

"Music is a universal language," said Alleman. "In college where there are many different people of various backgrounds coming together, it is important that there is some common ground."

too hot to handle

If anything could be said about the NSU colorguard, The Demon Heat, it's that they are dedicated. Practicing long hours during the week and even on the weekends, it's no wonder that they are one of the best colorguards in the state, winning first place in the Independent World class in LCGPC (Louisiana Colorguard and Percussion Circuit).

"We practice from 3:30 to 5:30 every day," said Amy Dupuy, co-captain of guard. It doesn't matter the temperature or if it's raining or sunny, guard has practice. Before classes start in August, members of the Demon Heat are outside with the band in over 98 degree weather practicing and learning routines for shows. When it gets too hot outside, the football players take a break, guard keeps going. "[During Band Week] we're up from 7 in the morning until 10 at night, every day," said Sarah Giroir, co-captain of guard.

The Demon Heat brings spirit to every single game. Whether it be in the form of performing at pregame or half-time, cheering on the Demons in the stands or dancing to the music that the band plays, the Demon Heat shows their school spirit. "We are a very spirited group. Our main goal is to recruit as many people as we can to come to school here and be on guard. Also, we try to add Demon spirit into the routines wherever we can," said Dupuy.

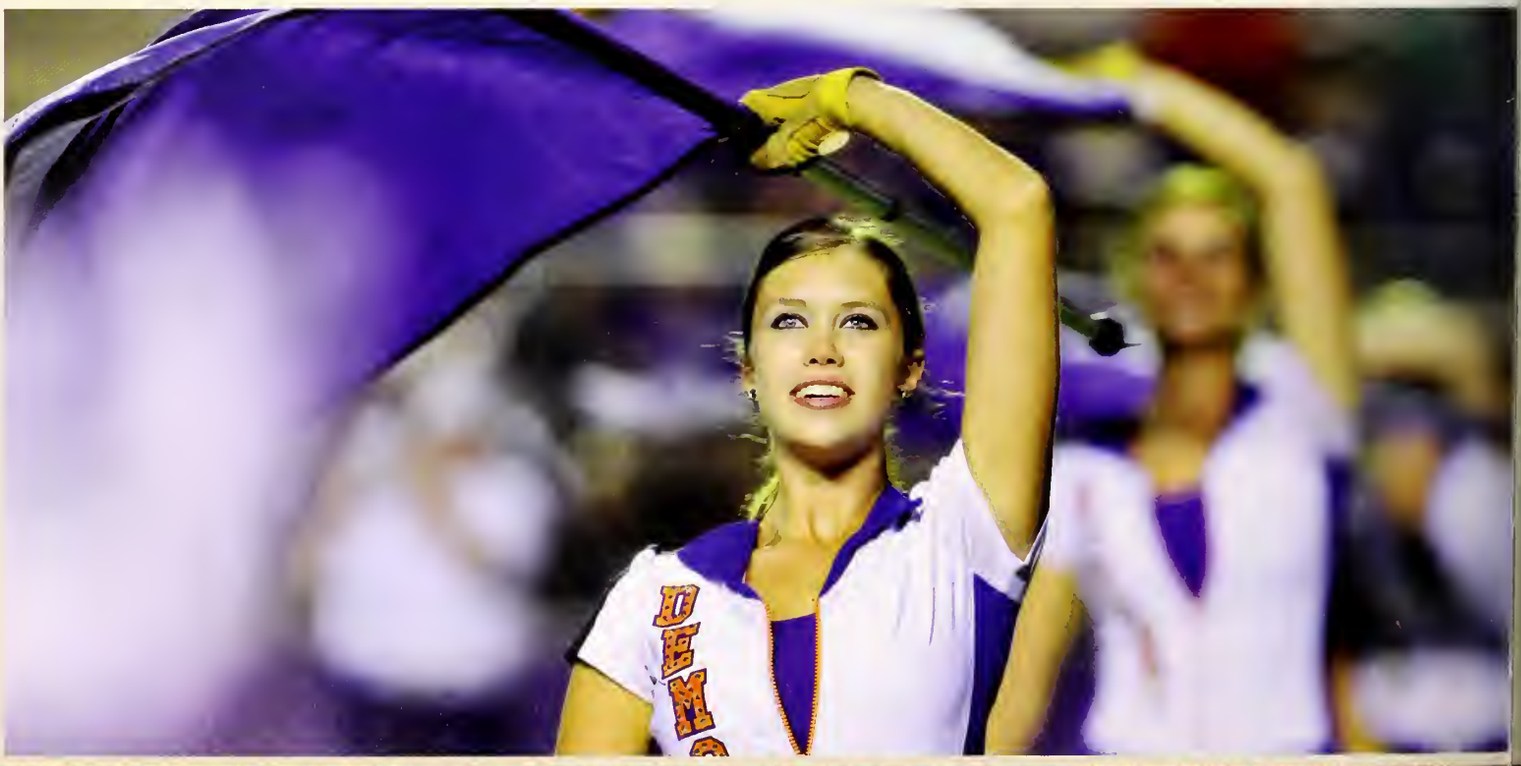

The Demon Heat doesn't relax after football season is over. No, that is when they begin gearing up for winterguard." Fall and spring are two totally different seasons. During winterguard our show is always changing and getting harder, so people are excited about learning new and challenging things," Dupuy said. Winterguard is the team that placed first last year in the Independent World class in Louisiana Colorguard and Percussion Circuit. "Winning meant a lot to us because it was our first time getting first place and it makes better people want to come here and join our guard," Dupuy said.

The fall semester isn't just about football, this is also the time when winterguard members begin practicing for the upcoming season. "It gives us a chance to introduce rifle and sabre to anyone that might want to do it so they can be prepared for winterguard if they are up to par. We did have a lot more people try out this fall because of our success during winterguard last year," said Dupuy.

However, it isn't just all work, Demon Heat members enjoy what they do as well. Regine Lyons, communications major, said, "What I love about colorguard is the feeling of performing. I love to perform, especially when I have a really good show." Cologuard isn't for the weak. It is hard work, but the rewards are worth it. "If it wasn't for colorguard I wouldn't be at NSU. Colorguard has impacted my life in so many ways and I wouldn't change it for the world," said Lyons. Dupuy also has a love for colorguard. "I love getting to meet new people every year and making friends. I also like how I can talk to almost anyone on the team at any time, even though I don't talk to them much during practice. I also love performing and learning new routines," she said.

GRADUATION 2012

once a demon, always a demon

Graduating from college is one of the most rewarding moments of a student's career. Over 500 students participated in the Fall 2012 commencement exercises.

This year's commencement hosted Paul Rainwater, chief of staff for Gov. Bobby Jindal, as the guest speaker. Rainwater's speech described to the new graduates how to tackle life choices.

Rainwater is a graduate from McNeese State University and a U.S military retiree, where he learned how to take choices life handed him and applied them to become the man he is today.

Throughout the journey of college with academics, organizations and social life there are a lot of ups and downs students face. Here at Northwestern, the professors make it a goal to share knowledge with students not only applying to academics, but also wisdom of the road ahead after graduation.
When reflecting on their four or more years at Northwestern, students think back on what they've learned in college.

"Graduation was both a celebration of achievement, and a stepping stone into the real world," Jeremy Quirk said. "But while my time in the Louisiana Scholars' College taught me to be proud of my achievements, it also taught me to be weary of falling victim to the overconfidence some achievements may engender. This, I believe, is the most valuable lesson one can learn in college-that life is about improvement, of oneself and of the institution in which one is involved."

Quirk graduated with a B.S. degree in chemistry with a concentration in professional chemistry and a B.A degree in liberal arts with a concentration in scientific inquiry. Earning her degree in psychology and addiction studies, Yevette Wagoner also noted on Graduation day just how much her college experience meant to her.

"I feel so honored to have graduated from Northwestern State University," Wagoner said. "Some of the best times of my life happened there. I have made lifelong friends and sisters through Greek life, learned some hard life lessons, as well as received an amazing education."

For graduating students it might be hard at first to let go of Vic the Demon, the sea of purple and white, the constant fight for a parking spot and the instructors who helped get them to this point, but they realize something bigger lies ahead.

"As I begin my career out in 'the real world' there is no doubt in my mind, Northwestern has prepared me for anything and everything," Wagoner said.

PITCH PERFECT ALUMNA

Wanetah Walmsley

All college students dream of one day being successful. Whether it is in business, education, science, music arts, or culinary making it to the "Big Time" is a dream of many college students in the United States.

Here at Northwestern, one of our own, Wanetah Walmsley, can say that her dreams are coming true. She has choreographed, danced in, voice recorded and acted in many films that have been hits across American. Most of us are familiar with the films that she has participated in such as "Strawdogs", "Drive Angry", "Vampires Suck", the short film "Most Likely to Kill" and her newest and most popular "Pitch Perfect".

Walmsley was hired on to Pitch Perfect as a singer. One of the experiences she had as a cast member was having her own built in voice recording studio to practice in. She put in three months of singing and dance rehearsals that consisted of a 12 hour days and eight hour work rehearsal times. Walmsley had to learn the task of how to dance to a melody on an eight count while singing base at the same time. Though this was an artistic challenge, she had to face she pushed to work hard for her dreams and ended successfully with a scene as a cast member in the movie Pitch Perfect.

Walmsley graduated from Northwestern in 2004 with a major in theater and minor in dance. She spent many hours in our CAPA building through the years of 2001 to 2004 practicing and making rehearsals. Her dream was to be in film making. Walmsley feels that "Your film work will always last from year to year." Wanlmsley chose film-making because she loves to entertain and perform for others, not for the money, but for the love and passion she carries for the theater and arts. Film making is a way for you to communicate and connect with people, allowing the audience to laugh or cry, to feel the emotions the actors' feel and put out.

SAY YES TO THE DRESS

alumna on reality show

Most women dream of the moment when they'll be standing in a bridal salon picking out their own special white dress, but most never imagine that moment being watched by millions of people on TV.

For spring 2009 NSU graduate DeShae Hughes, this is exactly what happened.

Hughes, born and raised in Denham Springs, made her small screen debut on TLC's "Say Yes to the Dress" on Aug. 17, 2012.

"My friends and family always said I belonged on a reality TV show," Hughes said. "Anyone who knows me wasn't surprised that I was picked to be on the show."

"Say Yes to the Dress" is a reality TV show that features women from all over the country selecting their wedding gowns from the legendary Kleinfeld Bridal store in New York, New York.

Hughes was married on Oct. 27, 2012, to Chris Pardon in Baton Rouge.

"It was pretty surreal being on 'Say Yes to the Dress'," Hughes said. "I have always been a fan of the show and said whenever I got engaged, I would apply."

According to Hughes, she is very excited about her dress. "Since the show has already aired and everyone has seen the dress, it has been fun to be able to share my excitement with all of my friends and family," Hughes said.

According to Hughes, when the show was filmed she was not even sure her segment would air. She was informed her episode would be airing only a few weeks before it premiered.

In honor of her small screen debut her mother threw a "viewing party" for close friends and family the night the episode aired. According to Hughes, she was a nervous wreck the entire day and the "fact that it was part of the season finale just added pressure."

"During the episode, I found myself holding my breath," Hughes said. "I was nervous about how they would edit the show together, hoping they wouldn't make us look too crazy! People who watch reality TV, myself included, watch it for the drama."

Despite nervous beginnings, according to Hughes the episode captured the moment just as it was. Hughes went on to say that she and her family cried, clapped, laughed and cheered throughout the entire episode.

Thinking back to her time at NSU, Hughes' favorite memory of her college days was being involved through Phi Mu fraternity and as a Freshman Connector. "These two organizations opened so many doors for me and allowed me to meet so many new people along the way," Hughes said.

Speaking of meeting new people, as most "Say Yes to the Dress" fanatics know, a visit to Kleinfeld isn't the same without meeting fashion guru of the store Randy Fenoli.

"Randy is my FAVORITE on the show!" Hughes said. "I actually did not get to meet Randy Fenoli because, ironically, he was in New Orleans filming his own series, 'Randy To The Rescue'."

According to Hughes, she didn't choose to go on the show, but rather the show chose her. Hughes is a self-proclaimed "girly girl" and a dream of hers has always been to get her dress from Kleinfeld.

Would she do it all over again? According to Hughes, definitely. "I am so glad I was able to have this experience. It has all been a fairy tale ever since I got engaged," Hughes said. Hughes went on to explain that her proposal was in front of about 1,500 people and filmed, just like her dress search.

"Looking back, I am so glad I followed through with my crazy dream of going to Kleinfeld for my wedding dress," Hughes said. "Now I will be able to show my future children and grandchildren part of our love story."

IN WITH THE OLD AND IN WITH THE NEW

fashion trends at nsu

As one walks around campus, it is clear that there are a variety of vibrant styles that constitute fashion trends at NSU. Although we are diverse, it is clear that the times have changed over the last few decades and thus style has changed with it.

The face of the student body at NSU looked entirely different several decades ago in every sense of style. Men were most often seen wearing a buttoned shirt with slacks and a blazer. Although women's fashion was slightly more variable, one of the most common articles of clothing worn was the long skirt that was often plaid.

A popular trend in women's tops was for the collar to be a color that was distinct from the shirt color. For example, a popular option was the wearing of a black top with a white collar.

The choices in clothing were hardly as diversified as current options, but nothing was more uniform than hair length. There were certainly variations in hair style, but everyone, regardless of their gender, had short hair.

If there were any brave long-haired individuals, then they mostly evaded yearbook photos. Otherwise, a "long-haired" woman's hair fell just above her shoulders.

In 2013, there are almost as many fashion trends as there are people who wear clothes. Most students will purchase all of their clothes and accessories from stores. However, a trend that is becoming increasingly popular is DIY, or do it yourself.

Some students want to make their own clothes and, more often, accessories, so they may choose their own colors, style, size and whatever else the creator decides to customize. The two most common techniques used for people to make their own clothing are crocheting and knitting.

CURRENT TRENDS:

Junior Katie Beverly prefers to crochet because she says it is both quicker and easier. She says that crocheting makes what she designs look more chaotic and artsy rather than the traditional organized patterns in knitting.

"I like that you can personalize your clothes. You can have whatever you want. If you want a bright pink hat, for instance, you don't have to take what someone can give you," Beverly said.

Senior Marissa Sonnier also prefers to crochet because she also believes it is easier than knitting and thus instantaneously rewarding.

"I can make scarves, hats, bags, afghans, slippers and stuffed animals," Sonnier said.

Both Beverly and Sonnier say that hats are the easiest items to crochet. "They're easy to make, they can make you look sophisticated and stylish and they're useful," Beverly said.

The current trend to "craft your own style" is not only produced from crocheting and knitting. Students who do not have the ability to create some of their own clothes and accessories personalize their own wardrobes from what they buy.

Sophomore Hank Jarobe is observant of current trends but does not rigidly follow them. "Of course I pay attention to what's going on around me, at least in a general sense, but a lot of what I wear just deals with me avoiding looking like I just rolled out of bed. Trends come and go, but I just sort of wear what I like," Jarobe said.

Something that is both trendy and individualized is layering. It shows off more of someone's wardrobe at one time (if that person does it right) and is always warm.

"One of the primary reasons for me layering clothes is for warmth. Usually when I layer things, it's for my own amusement, though. In high school, I had to wear a uniform, so I would put on something underneath it just to not get so bored," Jarobe said.

There is hardly just one way to be fashionable, whether students have self-made accessories or an entirely store-bought wardrobe. Embodying a current fashion trend does involve being observant of the mainstream, but it also involves embracing one's individuality and creating a new self-made style.

Regardless of how fashionable students currently are at NSU, the diversity of styles has evolved from what once seemed uniform.

where ideas come alive

Since the 1970's, Argus, the student literary arts magazine, has been cranking out some of NSU's best talent. Founded by Dr. Christine Ford, the magazine is comprised of student work in different mediums, consisting of art, photography, fiction, poetry and creative nonfiction. Argus has an annual competition with the winners of first, second and third place receiving a cash prize.

However, Argus is more than a competition, it is a forum to express the thoughts and workings of NSU's students. "We pride ourselves on publishing writing and art that reflects the diverse population of students on the campus." Kaysee Carrere, senior english major is the 2012-2013 Editor of the Argus and said, "We consider ourselves an outlet of self-expression, and we encourage students to write honestly and uninhibited."

Each year Argus has a theme, this year is "Song of Myself." The magazine will have an antique feel and will be themed after the poem "Song of Myself" by Walt Whitman. We chose "Song of Myself" because we feel that Argus is an outlet for self-expression," said Carrere.

Being published in Argus is a huge accomplishment and maybe a predictor of success. "Hollywood screenwriter Juliet Snowden "The Possession", "Knowing" and "Boogeyman" published in Argus when she was a student at LSMSA. Novelist Clarence Nero "Cheekie", "Too Much of a Good Thing Ain't Bad" and "Three Sides to Every Story" published work in Argus as an NSU grad student. One former Argus editor, Angelin Adams Borsics, is now an associate editor at Random House/Clarkson Potter Publishers in New York City," said Dr. Julie Kane, Poet Laureate of Louisiana and Argus Advisor.

Argus is a showcase for evolved doodles, captured perfect moments and ideas that have been wrestled with and beaten down to form beautiful and interesting stories and poems. Argus contains something for everyone and is a place where NSU's cream of the crop resides. Argus is an outlet and a place where student's ideas come alive and it only gets better. "Each year I am amazed and humbled by the creative talent of NSU's students," said Kane.

old station with new vibrations

KNWD was founded in 1973, initially playing rock music. As far as traditions go, the KNWD staff takes pride in being 100% student ran. "All of our staff are students, with student-run live shows. We take pride in the wide variety of music we play throughout the year," said Tara Luck, a senior majoring in liberal arts.

"I love working at KNWD. I wouldn't even really call it working because it's so much fun. I love working with the staff and look forward to whatever we have going on. It's truly been an adventure," said Micah Pickering, a sophomore majoring in mass communication. "As a group the most memorable moment KNWD has had, was when we did our special Halloween edition of the News at Noon. We pretended that there was a zombie attack and it was a lot of fun. Especially since we scared some poor bystander with all the screaming," said Pickering

""The best moment for me was when I first got on air live," said Matthew Lingle, a sophomore majoring in unified public safety administration. "My experience with KNWD has made me better at talking to groups of people and public speaking."

"I have been the Assistant Music Director, Music Director, and now General Manager. It is an exciting and fulfilling job, with new ideas and experiences around every corner," said Luck. Among the new ideas includes KNWD's hope of streaming online this upcoming semester and hosting Demon Fest Music Festival to showcase local NSU talent.

CURRENT SAUCE

student newspaper of NSU since 1914

The Current Sauce is Northwestern State University's student-driven news publication. It was founded in 1914 and continues to reach students almost 100 years later. Although the newspaper was once much longer than the current four-page spread, budget cuts have brought fewer journalism students to NSU.

There are still those who are dedicated to restoring the level of information once offered to the students of Northwestern. Jimmie Walker, standing editor-in-chief of The Current Sauce, served as a member of the staff for his entire undergraduate career. When he enrolled at Northwestern to receive his master's, he rejoined The Current Sauce as the EIC.

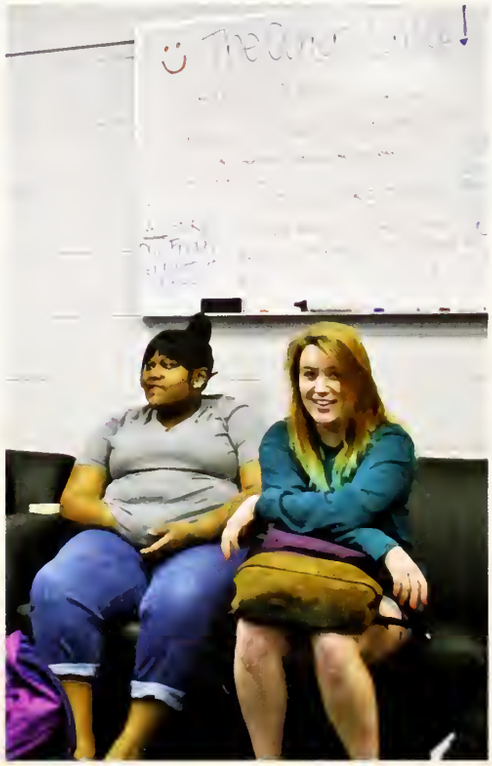

According to Walker, The Current Sauce staff ends the school year as a family. "Working on The Sauce has been great," Walker said. "I met some amazing people during my time here. Some of those people I worked with, some of them I interviewed for a story."

The Current Sauce staff has attended a few conferences in past years to learn new skills and to introduce fledgling members to the world of newswriting and design.

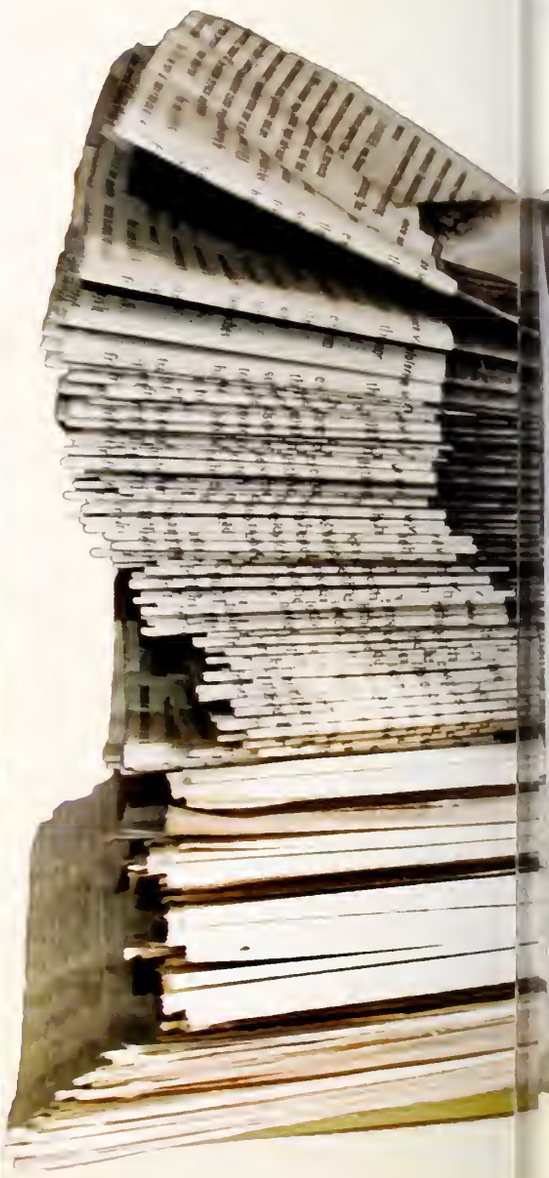

The College Media Association-conference during March in New York City, New York, gives Current Sauce writers a chance to meet other students from across the country and engage in a more fast-paced form of print journalism, that they are unable to experience in Natchitoches.

Lifestyle columnist Jacob Labutka, a junior studying urban planning, used his experience at The Current Sauce to become a writer for Ohio State University's The Cauldron during his semester-long stay as a National Exchange Program student. While in Cleveland, he sent weekly lifestyle columns to The Current Sauce on his experiences in the big city.

From spotlights on NSU's fashionable students, to the right way to dress for an ABC party, Labutka is intent on supplying Natchitoches with up-to-date fashion information.

"Every week I ponder the world around me and write something fashionable or something with cultural significance," Labutka said. "Case in point, I rant by way of proper discourse."

While some technology-savvy people may criticize print media as out of date, the staff of The Current Sauce has been trying to update their style to involve social media and online media. Linda Ahlskog, a fine and performing arts major, was hired on to act as a social media consultant to The Current Sauce.

Although she was one of the newest members, Ahlskog said that it was a wonderful new experience. "I'm honored to be working on The Current Sauce," Ahlskog said. "I can tell how hard the staff works to put out the paper every week and I'm glad to be a part of that."

After 98 years working for the students of Natchitoches, The Current Sauce was still going strong in the 2012-2013 school year. With new faces filtering into the small office every few years, the quality and topics change with the seasons, but it is easy to see that The Current Sauce will be around for years to come.

POTPOURRI

"My experience on the yearbook staff taught me about public relations and having many friends makes getting the job done easier. It also made me make many connections with other people and was an essential part of my college experience." Brandy Danzy, photographer, sophomore biology major.

"Being on the NSU yearbook, to me, is a privilege. It takes hard work and dedication and can be very stressful, but it has given me the opportunity to meet and work with some amazing people. As a freshmen the yearbook has given me the chance to get out of my shell and meet students and faculty in all departments offered at NSU." Catherine Wagoner, staff writer, freshmen nursing major.

"This semester has been a roller coaster of emotions. It's been late nights, lots of bad feelings, lots of favors from Wesley, lots of long talks with Shana, lots of whispering with Alexis, lots of cussing, lots of favors from friends (thank you all by the way) and lots of threats...probably too many threats, but it has all been worth it. It's always a great feeling seeing ideas that we have had since this summer come to life. Good job guys." Randa Lopez, associate editor, senior communications major.

"This was my first semester working on the Potpourri. I've learned so much and have met such great people through yearbook. My experience so far has been one of the greatest and I look forward to many more semesters on the Potpourri." Nick Myers, assistant designer, sophomore graphic communications major.

"The job of Potpourri advisor is challenging at times, but I enjoy working with the staff to create a final product that all NSU students will appreciate. This year's book is a tribute to the talents of this hard-working group." Stephanie Masson, yearbook advisor.

"I got the chance to meet a lot of really awesome professors and students at NSU through the yearbook. Although it could be stressful, the results were rewarding and it'll be great to be able to show people my stories later in life." Catherine Beverly, staff writer, junior and english major.

"Deadlines, deadlines, deadlines is something I will remember about my first year on the Potpourri, but it was a fun experience. I definitely learned punctuality. Even though it became challenging at times, I got a chance to meet a lot of the faculty and students on campus." Jessica Blow, staff writer, junior mass communication major.

"I have come to terms that I never want to take pictures of the Christmas Festival. Too crazy!" Victoria Burgess, photographer, sophomore psychology major.

"Being on the yearbook staff has been a ton of work but through it all I have had a great experience and met a lot of people on NSU's campus." Bailee Cartwright, sports writer, junior mass communications major.

"Pretending I have the power of being able to photo shop anyone's photo...AWESOME." Michael Herren, lead photographer, senior graphic communications major.

"My work speaks for itself," Kaylee Medine, graphic communications major, senior.

"The most rewarding part of being on yearbook was the sense of satisfaction I felt after turning in the last of my stories. Despite frustrations like having to get quotes from evasive individuals, I feel that this experience has bettered my ability to get things done without wanting to pull my hair out. It's been a year filled with hectic deadlines head turning conversations. I'm entirely ready to do this again next year." Jacob Labutka, staff writer, junior humanities and social thought major.

"This year has been very hectic, but it has all been worth it. It turns out that all of the late nights paid off! This has been such a great staff to work with. When it is crunch time, everyone really stepped up to help meet deadlines and produce quality work. While it may seem overwhelming at times, being apart of this staff has been one of the greatest experiences of my college career." Shana Lee, Editor, senior elementary education major.

The 2012-2013 Potpourri was printed on a total editorial budget funded by the students of the university. All full-time students of any Northwestern campus in fall 2012 may receive a book. Those students who did not pay the student association fee in the fall semester or those wanting additional copies may purchase a yearbook for $21. Students who have graduated and live outside the Natchitoches area may pay an additional $10 shipping and handling fee to have the book mailed.

Volume 102 of the Potpourri was printed by Multi-Media Technology in Hong Kong using Heidelberg Presses. The book was published in accordance with a contract enacted by Multi-Media Technology Director John Trotter. The 2012-13 Potpourri was produced using Mac OS X Version 10.7.5. The software used was Adobe InDesign CS5.5, Adobe Bridge CS 5.5, Adobe Illustrator CS5, Adobe Photoshop CS5, and Microsoft Word of Mac.

The layout for individual pages was designed using Adobe InDesign CS5.5. Inter-State portrait photographers took the individual pictures. The Potpourri is a student publication, which means anyone may write, take pictures or help with the production of this publication. The Potpourri office is located in Room 225 of Kyser Hall.
